BALTIMORE. MONDAY, AUGUST 5, 1861. The battle of Bull Run, says the New York Herald, "has added another hundred millions to the cost of the war." We do not think so. On the contrary, we believe it will result in saving to the Northern States, not merely one hundred millions of dollars, but, perhaps, twice that sum, or more. Instead of prolonging the conflict, the tendency of that victory is to hasten negotiations for mediately, but it is already foreshadowed. Many persons in the free States are becoming disgusted with the war, and, although they may swim with the current for a little while longer, there are enough indications of independent action to show that the boasted unity of political parties at the North is by no means so perfect as some of the journals of that section would have us believe The old antagonism is not only exhibiting unmistakeable symptoms of-revival, but is in a fair way of breaking up the coalition that has been tempor rarily formed. The voters at the North are divided into three parties-the radical Republican the moderate Republican, and the Democratic We throw out of the question that other organization, the "American" party, for the reason that it has been principally absorbed by, and may be classed with, the moderate Republicans. All these parties, since the date of Mr. Lincoln's first nation, have acted in seeming accord; but the radicals have gradually worked themselves to the front—as men of extreme views and intense convictions always have done, and always will do, in great national crises. It is well known, however, that this acrid and fanatical faction is, by far, the weakest, numerically, of any, and that t can only be rendered seriously formidable by the prestige of success. It controls, at this time, the measures of the Government; it exercises a preponderating influence in the Cabinet; it enjoys he largest share of official patronage; it is the recipient of the most lucrative jobs and contracts; but its tenure of power, and of the advantages which power confers, is dependent solely upon i ability to prosecute the war with vigor, and to a speedy and triumphant conclusion. Thus far its assumptions have been tolerated. Thus far, by the aid of active and unscrupulous journalists, it has succeeded in debauching popular sentiment at the North, and in inspiring all classes there with ible, and that it would be an easy matter to reduce the seceded States to submission. How effectually this arrogance has been rebuked, we all know. What has since followed is natural enough. The almost unbroken series of reverses which the Federal arms have met with, bas stimulated enquiry and provoked discussion. Men cannot long be deluded in the presence of facts which it is impossible not to recognize; and when the deception of which they have been the dupes once becomes transparent, farewell to all further confidence in its authors. The reaction now setting in at the North indicates that the fortunes of the radical Republicans have culminated. That they will not surrender the authority and influence they have acquired, without a 'struggle, we can very readily imagine. That, though conscious of the precariousness of their position, they have determined to "rule or ruin," the wicked and reckless

When a man sets about the construction of a romance or an epic, one of the first objects to which his attention is turned is the supplying himself with a hero. There is not much difficulty generally. It is easy to make a man young brave, handsome, well known, covered with glorious deeds, on paper; and the narrative, being entirely under the control of the author, may go on swimmingly and conduct the principal personage of the tale to the pinnacle of renown, and to all the fruits of the most triumphant success. But, in actual life, the task is not so easy. Many aman has proposed to himself the fortunes of a Napoleon, whose career stopped short at the end of a single campaign. Bonaparte would never have been regarded as a great General if the brilliant success at Montenotte had not been followed by:

Washington—Signature of the French Prince, and the purpose of his visit. I have authority to say that he is attracted to this continent through mere motives of curiosity, and not by any official views or purpose. He made his appearance on the floor of the Senate to-day, attended by his suite, Secretary Seward and the French Minister. He remained about twenty minutes, and during his stay engaged in passing conversation with Senators Breckinridgo and Hale. Army News-Suppression of Official Returns of the Battle-Future Movements. &c.

There are few straggling soldiers now in the city. The Provost Marshal's patrol force is constantly on the alert, and consists of both foot and horsemen. There are yet many whose only wish is for an opportunity to desert, and some managed away by almost every train. In order to increase the efficiency, and lessen the labor of the Provost's police, it is said that sentries will be stationed at the corners of the streets; and prisoners taken will be transferred from one guard to another, until they are delivered into final custody. Although the official reports of the various commanders engaged in the battle of the 21st uit, have been received, the Secretary of War has given positive instructions to suppress their publication. More proof than this of the fact of the immense loss of the Federals is hardly needed. Any one should not be a subject to the subject sufficiently to show a constantly on the alert, and consists of both foot and horsemen. The New Orleans papers of July 27th contain the bout of the various ered that not only have the issues been changed upon which the war was inaugurated, but that its prosecution involves the creation of an enormous public debt, and the imposition of heavy taxes upon real and personal property, and upon articles of prime necessity. Bankers and capitalists are beginning to weigh the cost of the war against its probable results. The efforts of Secretary Chase to obtain a loan of five millions of dollars upon Treasury notes, at sixty days, have only been partially successful. Treasury notes themselves are already at a discount, with the prospect of a much heavier decline within a brief period. Where the extraordinary sum which Congress has voted to meet the expenses of the war, is to be obtained, no one knows and but few venture to conjecture. In addition to these premonitory symptoms of trouble at home, every fresh mail from Europe does but serve to confirm the general impression of the intention of England and France to ecognize the Southern Confederacy at an early day. ned by the intelligence which has just reached them of the great victory achieved by the South. no one can for a moment doubt, who is conscious of the extent to which the industrial interests of

But the war policy they have forced upon the Administration is destined, henceforth, to meet with strenuous opposition on the part of those who have supported it. ARRIVAL OF PRINCE NAPOLEON AT WASHINGTON.

Prince Napoleon, accompanied by two aids and the captain of the French steam yacht on which he arrived in New York, reached this city yesterday afternoon, and drove (in that geatleman's carriage) to the residence of the French Minister, with whom the party design remaining during their sojourn, for a few day, in the Federal metropolis. The Princess Clotilde (his wife) and the rest of his suite remain in New York for the present.

In countenance and the general contour of his head Prince Napoleon much resembles his uncle, the elder of his name; though in person he is larger.

would be consummated." So, on the strength of that fear, President Lincoln did venture to defend Fort Sumter!

The third and longest section of the message is the pleading against the right of secession, conducted in a fashion which would not obtain much credit in any district attorney's office there or in the Old Bailey here. The secession of the States, "commonly called the slave States," is again mentioned as an offence, which is begging the whole question at issue, and at the same time confessing how incapable the Federal government has shown itself of retaining any hold upon the Southern Steuthern members of the late Union. Yet, as our readers are well aware, the Southern States have been only too anxious to keep open a path for friendly communications with the Avarther.
