Republican national committee permitted newspaper correspondents to listen to the arguments and the evidence presented in connection with contested seats in the national convention. Ten men, representing five recognized press associations, were sentatives of the individual newspapers of the country.

The committee met at 10 o'clock with Chairman Victor Rosewater of Nebraska, presiding. Under the rules the first contests taken up were those from Alabama, where the delegates-atlarge and the district delegates were all contested. Under the rules of the committee each side was allowed haif an hour to present its contentions in the state at large and 15 minutes for with the certainty that the national the districts.
