Officially recognizing "Mother's day," Gev. Woodbridge N. Ferris has issued the following formal proclamation:

During the last 50 years the American home has undergone little less than a revolution. Science and invention have wrought marvelous changes in our economic and industrial conditions. Some of these changes have a tendency to destroy the unity of home interests. Time and distance have been annihilated. Home permanence has in a large measure been destroyed. The responsibilities of the mother have been increased. She finds it impossible to keep her flock together; she finds her task of inspiring and directing her children more and more difficult. She must, therefore, do her greatest work when her children are "little tots," when they are most responsive to the tenderest and wisest suggestions. American mothers recognize this necessity, and are making help. The mothers of every country are more important than armies and munitions of war. The mothers are the source of civilization. To our
