Edward Robinson, a quiet and respectable appearing man, came before Judge Orr Thursday to secure a divorce from his wife, Estelle O. Robinson, on the ground of desertion. The plaintiff is 33 years of age and the defendant 30. The marriage took place Aug. 18, 1898, and very soon thereafter the defendant developed a restless spirit. So far as appeared on the trial she had no cause for desertion, save a desire to see the world and enjoy life in a livelier fashion than was afforded her as the wife of the plaintiff. Married in August, she found September interminably long and tedious, and by the time October came she was so restless that she could no longer resist the impulse to see life and the world. Acting upon the suggestions of her emotions, always unsafe guides and guards, she packed her suitcase neatly and went her way. The court granted Mr. Robinson the divorce. Robinson is a waiter at the Minnesota Club.

"THE FATAL WEDDING."

At the Grand Opera House.

One of the most striking and magnificent scenes ever presented on any stage is said to be the great wedding scene in "The Fatal Wedding," which is being presented at the Grand Opera House next week. In order to add to the effectiveness of this scene, Sullivan, Harris & Woods, under whose management "The Fatal Wedding" is being presented, have procured the services of the world-famous organist, Miss Gertrude Haynes. Miss Haynes has a world-wide reputation as a church organist and has attracted a great deal of attention with her "Choir Celestial." This consists of a choir of twenty-five boys headed by the boy soloist, Master James Hynes. All of these boys are clothed in the regulation surplice and cassock, and as Miss Haynes plays upon a large organ, which is especially carried for the production, the boys march in upon a magnificent church setting, singing an appropriate selection, such as "The Palm" or "The Holy City." The effect is very impressive and for a few moments the stagecraft is entirely lost sight of while a religious fervor seems to dominate everything and everybody. This scene has again and
