THE EXEMPLARY WIFE. O blest is he whose arms endfold A consort virtuous as fair! Her price is far above the gold That wordly spirits love to share. On her, as on a beauteous ilse, Amid life's dark and storme sea, In all his trouble, all his toil, He rests with deep security.

Even in the night watch dark and lone, The distaif fills her busy hand; Her husband in the gates is known Among the elders of the land; Her household all delight to share, The food and raiment she bestows, Even she with a parental care Regards their weakness and their wors.

Her pitying hand supplies the poor, The widowed one, the orphan child, Like birds assembled round her door, When sweeps the winter tempest wild. Her lips, with love and wisdom fraught, Drop, like the honeycomb, their sweets,; The young are by her dictates taught. The mourner her condolence meets.

Her lovely babes around her rise-Fair scions of a holy stem; And deeply shall her bosom prize. The blessings she receives from them. Beauty is vain as summer bloom To which a transient fate is given; But hers await a lasting doom In the eternal bowers of heaven. - Knox.
