Mr. Johnson was a widower of long residence, with a family by a native wife. He was in good circumstances apparently, letting land for rice and other purposes, some of which he rented from Kawailoa, perhaps better known as Paty's ranch from its owner. On receipt of the verdict, the Marshal sent police from town to assist the local authorities in tracing up the author of the tragedy. It is said that suspicion is definite.

Pursuant to the verdict of the coroner's jury on the death of Mr. Johnson at Waialua, the police arrested his son-inlaw Ailan on suspicion for the crime. Deputy Attorney-General Peterson left for the village Wednesday afternoon, to attend the preliminary investigation before the committing magistrate next
