Wonderful Voice.

Secure in the confidence that she had entranced the audience which filled the Hawaiian Opera House last night, Countess Eleonora de Cisneros retired from the stage after singing Saint Saens' "Mon Coeur," from Samson and Delilah, followed by a triumphal burst of applause, which rippled, then roared, until she responded with the rollicking "Habanera" of Bizet's Carmen, concluding the latter amid an avalanche of applause.

avalanche of applause, Countess Cisneros held the center of the stage last night—her final concert in Honolulu—and gave a marvelous exhibition of her vocal range and the mellifluous and elusive quality of her voice, for, whether in the martial strains of Verdi's "O Don Fatale, "the roll of Trindelli's "Amore, Amore!" the countess' voice thrilled and soothed
