Mr. Carlisle's Committees Conposed of 311 Members from Nouthern States and 175 from Southarn States.

New York World

A simple analysis of the construction of the standing committees of the house will set at rest all the stupid charges of favor-itism of the south made for political purposes against Mr. Carlisle.

Everybody knows that the majority rules in the committee room as well as in the House. The Chairmanships of Ways and Means and Appropriations are impor-tant, because the Chairman of the former Committee has a sort of political recognition as a leader, and the latter is accepted as authority on the important matters of appropriations. The two leading chairmen are chosen because of their especial fitness and experience, and the positions accorded them are in recognition of their abilities. At the head of these Committees Mr. Carlisle has placed Morrison, of Illinois, and Randall, of Pennsylvania. The other Chairmauships are mainly coveted because they bring members who fill them into prominence on the floor. But the Chairman is at all times subject to the will of a majority of his Committee. Sectionally the forty-three House Com mittees under Speaker Carlisle are divided as follows: Num- North- South-

On every other who has spent much time in Fargo, recent- Committee the Southern members are in a minority, and of the whole Committee strength they have a majority against them of nearly twoto one.

Under Speaker Keifer the Committee on Appropriations, Judiciary, Coinage, Comnerce and Agriculture, all important committees, had on them the same number of Southern members as are on the same Committees under Mr. Carlisle. The Ways and Means Committee had four Southern representatives, while it now has five.

What folly, then, to pretend that the Southern States have received any undue ecognition from Mr. Carlisle, or that the South has any greater influence or control in legistation than the population and interests of the section fairly entitle it to!

The superstitious young couples who someomplate matrimony will be glad to learn that there are thirty-two days in the year on which it is considered unlucky to marry, according to the authority of a manuscript which comes down from the afteenth century. These days are January 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 10, 15; February 6, 7, 18; March 1, 6, 8; April 6, 11; May 5, 6, 7; June 7, 15; July 5, 19; September 6, 7; October 6; November 15, 16; December 15, 16, 17. It will be seen that January is the worst month and October the best for marriage. Perhaps this superstition arose from the fact that in olden days, as well as modern days, October was the loveliest month in the year—the season of plenty, harvesting and merry-making.

More or less attention had been paid to toilets, and soap had been used with an unstinted hand. Jeans in gray or butternut was the prevailing attire, with hats more or less dilapidated, and collarless cotton shirts. One lantern-jawed young man with an eye for the startling in contrasts, had a full shock of hair, bright blue jeans coat, yellow shirt and white canvas base ball shoes. Ages varied as much as did personal appearance, the years running from 19 to 65. Each man before receiving sentence asked if he had anything to say, and there were but few that did not avail themselves of the opportunity. William Tuttle, aged, gray and bent, said with a quivering voice: " know, jedge, I dun dun it. I never was in jail befo'. I'm an ole man, an' will leave a helpless family. I dun don't know nuthin' bout law." Apart from his closing "tatement there was a sincerity in what he said, and a pathos in its delivery that created a just sympathy. He was given the lightest sentence imposed by law, thirty days imprisonment and a fine of $100. If he hasn't the money he will have to work it out at the rate of 75 cents a day.

One of the prisoners was a man who had been over-shrewd in his attempted evasion of the law. Being a seller and not a manufacturer, he would set a bottle or demijohn of the fluid on the mantel and walk out of the room. Returning he would find the liquor gone and money in its place. Another man appealed for a light sentence, saying he was "fitified," which meant subject to fits. David S. Williams, dismissed before court was over was asked, "Did you come voluntarily to the deputy marshal?" He replied with great candor, "No, sir; I was sent for." He had undergone a hard experience. Not very guilty in the first place, the arresting officer felt warranted in merely telling him to come to town on a certain date. In the interval his wife deserted home and went to live with an adjacent moonshiner, whose still within a few days thereafter was seized and destroyed. As one means of revenge the moonshiner be gan burning fences, and was one day threatening a sister of the prisoner, when the latter came up, and making the charge of cowardice, was promptly shot in the side. "Hit laid me up for seven weeks, jedge, an' that's why I didn't keep my 'pintment with the revenue officer. The ball was '38.'" The prisoner was still wearing the same clothes in which he was shot, the holes made by the bullet through coat, vest and trousers waistband being still unmended. One poor wretch made an appeal for clem ency on account of his children, one a girl of 13 and the other a boy of 7. The man was a widower, and before leaving home he had induced some woman to go and live at the house to look after the little ones. He said, appealingly, "she promised to stay only till Christmas, an' then she'd go home." A curiosity in the batch was a moonshiner dude Somewhat effeminate in appearance, his short, curly black hair was neatly parted in the centre, from either side of which, resting on his forehead, was a dainty little spiral lock. Next came Charles Storgis, sallow and sickly-looking, with boils breaking out all over him, the result of too much pork and other greasy diet. James Nolan, with a grave countenance told his henor that during the prevalace of smallpox in the mountains some one said whicky was good for the dis ease, and as a protection to himself and for the convenience of friends who feared contagion he kept liquor in the house for consumption and sale. Jesse Brown fellowed Nolan and was sentenced to sixty days imprisonment and $100 fine, the convicting evidence en given by his brothers. George and William.

Every Man His Own Weather Prophet For all meteoric or storm observations of large bodies of land in the temperate zone fix yourself with face looking toward the main sea or ocean.

If the wind is blowing in your face at the rate of only four to eight miles an hour rate is not apt to be present, as the attroopher.

A Happy New Year! is not apt to be present, as the atmosphere will likely be expanding and absorbing water and converting it into vapor and holding i suspended in the air until proper planetary phenomena transpire.

If the wind is moving at the rate of ten to fifteen miles an hour, it is probably passing to a rain, hail or snow-storm further inland, and you will likely find the barometer falling. thirty miles an hour it is likely passing furtherty miles and hour it is likely pas ther inland to a more violent rain, hail or snow precipitation. If it is moving at the afternoon at 2:30. o'clock. Popular prices. of forty to sixty miles an hour, it is probably blowing further inland to a waterspout hurricane or tornado, etc.

When you find the wind turned around (about 180 degrees) and blowing on your back the storm has passed you, and it is on its way back toward the sea, and you will be apt to find the barometer rising and temperature

If the wind turns partially around (about ninety degrees) and blows on your right and off your left, the storm is then supposed to pass by your left on its way toward the sea If the wind should turn the other way around (about ninety degrees) and blow on your left and off your right, then the storm is likely passing by the way of your right toward th There is frequently a kind of a short lull in front of traveling storms. There are mild local rains caused by slow changing po sitions of the planets, etc.

By noting these rules and watching the barometer the course and severity of storms may soon be tolerably well understood, even for great distances from the observer.

A Justice Who Isn't No Slouch. An Arkansaw justice of the peace is said to have sent the following letter to Coleridge: "I am mighty sorry that you ain't comin' to this state, for I did 'low to have a high ole time with you. I've got son that can out-rastle the next man, and ain't no slouch nuther, lemme tell yer. I've been a judge five years, and have whupped more men than a few. When I makes a rulin' in court she sticks. I ain't much in chancery business, but I'm wus than high water on a hog case."

Centrifugal Butter. [Chicago Times.]

The centrifugal process of making butter is becoming quite popular. A machine now in use in Chester county, Pennsylvania, has a capacity of about one thousand pounds of milk per hour, and is run by water-power at a speed of nearly two thousand revolutions per minute.

It is a poor town which has no murder mystemy these days.
