AWFUL SITUATION IN SWEDEN

Associated Press Secures Account of Condition of Affairs From Governor of Northern Province Large Amount of Funds Are Needed at Once.

Stockholm, Feb. 12.—Governor Bergstrom of Norrbotten, the most northerly and largest, and at the same time, the most affected of the famine stricken provinces, has made the following statement to the Associated Press correspondent regarding the condition of the province:

principal constituent of rural food, which in the eastern part of the province usually consists exclusively of unleavened barley bread and sour milk.

From the daily requis for help, for cattle fodder and for food for human beings, from the official reports of the government inspectors and from the statements of local relief committees and from reliable journals, I certainly do not exaggerate when I express the opinion that even if there is no absolute starvation at present, there is great danger of it unless relief in addition to that already received continues; another great slaughter of cattle will become necessary and possibly widespread starvation among the people will ensue.

If good and charitable people, out of their plenty would donate money and provisions, the gifts would be received with the greatest gratitude and the expressed wishes of the donors would always be respected.
