MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Congress met in Washington on Monday, and there being a quorum present the Speaker of the House announced the standing committees. Vermont was recognized as follows:

Mr. Willard is Chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, also on the Committee on Foreign relations.

Mr. Smith is on the committees on Banking and Currency, and Mines and Mining.

Judge Poland is Chairman of the Committee on Insurrectionary States and on Revision of the laws of the United States.

The President's Message was then presented and read by the Clerk. It is plain and concise and will meet the views of the mass of the Republican party.

THE FREE SPEECH ABOUT FREE LOVE.

The Springfield Republican which is generally sound on all the questions of the day makes some sharp comments on Free Love as advocated by Mrs Woodhull and others.

Theodore Tilton and Victoria C. Woodhull made a free love demonstration at Steinway hall New York, Monday evening designed as a sort of Butler display against those who refused to accept their doctrines. The advertisement declared that the meeting was for the express purpose of silencing the voices and stopping the pens of those, who, either ignorantly or willfully, and persistantly misrepresent, slander, abuse and vilify Mrs. Woodhull on account of her out-spoken advocacy of, and supreme faith in, God's first, last and best law, Horace Greeley, Gov. Rawley of Connecticut, and the Boston exclusives were specially invited to seats on the platform which invitation, of course, was not accepted.

But there were at least 3000 persons in the hall eager to hear Mrs Woodhull's exposition of her belief and her thrusts at her adversaries. Theodore Tilton occupied the chair, and observed in introducing Mrs. Woodhull, that notwithstanding all insinuations to the contrary, he could vouch for her as a virtuous woman. The lecture occupied about two hours delivery and was chiefly an attack on the marriage system, which she styled as outrage on individual freedom and barrier to general happiness. She maintained that marriage should partake more of the character of a contract, like any other legal agreement, and that its continuance for a lifetime was preposterous and an outrage. She believed and gloried in free love, which bound two parties to each other during its existence, and in severing their marital relations whenever each of the parties desired. The offspring of such love, she said, was best and purest, and she enumerated a host of distinguished personages whom she described as being born under such circumstances. As for myself, she declared, I have an inalienable, constitutional and natural right to love whom I may, to love as long or as short a period as I can, to change that love every day if I please, and with that right neither you nor any law you can frame have any right to interfere. I have a perfect right to free and unrestricted exercise of this right, and it is your duty not only to not interfere but as a community to see that I am protected in it. I trust that I am fully understood, for I mean just that and nothing less.

The bold, bald statement of Mrs. Woodhull were received with mingled cheers and hisses, the latter apparently gaining the mastery, and at one time during the delivery of the lecture there was much confusion. When Mrs. Woodhull, calling upon those who hissed to step upon the platform, her sister, Mrs. Crocker who sat in a private box near the stage, faced the audience and addressing the lecturer, said: Would you like to come into the world without knowing who your father or mother was? This sally was greeted with shouts of approbation by the audience, and Mrs. Crocker was called on to come upon the platform. Mr. Tilton here interfered, and a police man was summoned, who induced Mrs. Brooker to resume her seat but in vain tried to prevail upon her to leave the box. There was several similar interruptions during the lecture, and at its close there were loud shouts for Mrs. Brooker, who stepped to the front of her box, and delivered, as a parting shot, the question: I would ask, how can we reform the Greene street women my sister speaks of, and at the same time teach them to live promiscuously with men? No one seems to have attempted to answer the conundrum before the audience dispersed.

We are both glad and sorry to see free love treated and advocated in the plain terms and bold manner Mrs Woodhull has adopted;—glad, because it is high time that people knew exactly what it is these free love reformers aim at, and sorry, because it is always sad to see fine powers prostituted to such base purposes as Mrs Woodhull and Theodore Tilton seem to have become infatuated with. But Mrs. Woodhull is much mistaken if she supposed she could silence the tongues or stop the pens of the public by such a speech as that of Monday night. It will only make the former wag more freely, and the latter stab more sharply.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Cave Girardeau, Dec. 2, 1871.

Among the industries that have been built up and fostered by the "Great Western Resource," that of newspaper correspondence seems to occupy an important and commanding position. Indeed the correspondence feature of the Journal, is that to which more than any other, I believe, it owes its astounding success within the last year. It has made it what a local paper should be—something that is not intended to be critical of the great newspaper enterprises of our large cities, but a source of such information as can be readily attached in no other form—an indispensible adjunct to every well-regulated family in its vicinity, and an instrumentality of intelligence that is supplied in no other way.

But the excellence of your paper in this particular has received other and better endorsement than mine. Yet, I notice it at this time because I recognize my own neglect in my failure to contribute to this department as it is my pleasure sometimes—and my duty ever to do; and to acknowledge this remissness rather than because I have something interesting to furnish, I resume my place at my table in the character of your Missouri correspondent, the same "Equinox" that more than ten years ago first greeted your readers from a wild gorge of the Rocky Mountains.

It has been owing to no extraordinary vigilance exercised here that the fate of Chicago has not been ours during the past season; for with every advantage in favor of such a contingency that a prolonged period of drought, and the warmest weather can produce, there was, superadded the most inefficient fire organization that ever assisted in combining the circumstances to bring about a first-class conflagration. For having been spared such a calamity, we cannot be too grateful.

The Mississippi at this point, has within the last month, been the lowest of which there is any record, if we take into consideration the fact that since 1838, the year that is generally mentioned, as that when the stage of the water was the least; the bed of the river has risen by the amount of more than a foot of sedimentary deposits. The first-class boats have been entirely driven from the trade between St. Louis and Cairo, and only such service performed as the Upper Missouri and Cumberland river boats with those of that grade can furnish. But now the rising waters are gradually hiding from our view the long sandy bars that have divided the waters of our great river, and the huge paddles of the "Richmond" and the "Great Republic" once more vex the waters.

In the meantime our railroad is steadily reaching with its lengthening line in the direction of the Indies though as yet, locomotive No. 1 has not made its appearance. The people here are still, as they ever have been, waiting for outside capital to come in, and, aided by the immense natural advantages claimed for this situation, build up a great manufacturing and commercial emporium that shall make this one of the great places of earth. A few are willing to put their own shoulders to the wheel, but most seem to prefer praying to Hercules. For one, I believe that great advantages afforded by nature will sooner or later assert themselves and no want of enterprise on the part of some can avail to do more than hinder and postpone a great destiny. In dwelling on what has seemed to me a great subject, the importance of this site for the establishment of manufactures on an extensive scale, I may fail to interest any one other than myself, but if anything I could say, could interest a single one of the readers of the Journal to any practical purpose, provoking inquiry with a view to test by experiment the truth of statements from time to time put forth from this source I should cheerfully work in this way for such ends.

One half mile from where I write, terminates the Ozark Range, a ridge that rising in some instances to the height of a mountain and in others sinking to almost the level of a plain, stretches away in irregular undulations to the Rocky Mountains. The bluff that constitutes the end of this mimosa range is surmounted by an earth work battery of Fort "D," erected by Gen. Fremont at the beginning of the late war, to more effectually defend this point by commanding the approach from the river on the South. Below Fort D the system of marshes, lagoons and bayous commences that extends to the gulf. It will be seen by an examination of the physical geography of the country that no place below here on the right bank of the river is so well adapted for building a town above the danger of inundation as this; and indeed there is no town of the importance of this below St. Louis this side of the river. The banks of the river on either side between here and the mouth of the Ohio are very low and entirely unsuited for the location of a large city. Cairo, in spite of every effort seems destined to prove a failure; yet, had it but a firm foundation on which to build, it is believed it would have, ere it is, distanced either St. Louis, Louisville or Cincinnati. Cape Girardeau then seems, from its proximity to the mouth of the Ohio, to be available to an extent for the uses that—under more favorable circumstances—would attach to Cairo. This then being a point one hundred and fifty miles nearer than St. Louis by water to the "Great East," convenient for transhipment is desired to the smaller boats navigating the Ohio. Nearer to the south-west than St. Louis by the great thoroughfare now reaching from here in that direction, does it not seem that this place is well situated for commerce? Forty miles from here on the line of our new railroad is a mountain of iron, fully demonstrated to be exhaustless in quantity and cheaply and easily wrought. Ample occupation will be afforded to the freight carrying capacity of the road in bearing to market on the river bank here, the ores at lies loosely on the surface of this iron mountain by tens of thousands of tons; which can be here shipped by barges east, north or south or be ter still, smelted and converted into iron and steel in any of its various forms. Just above here on the Illinois side, is easy access to the river are coal fields sufficient to supply the needs of a dozen Birmingham's for centuries to come. The country to the west and south-west of us, for hundreds of square miles, is dark with forests of valuable timber suitable for nearly every purpose to which wood is applied. Cypress, black walnut, maple, hickory and ash abound, while furniture and implements manufactured from these woods are brought to our doors from hundreds of miles away. Kaolin and clays with silica and every ingredient that enters into the manufacture of vessels of earth and tile, from the finest queensware to the coarsest of pottery ware can be had in unlimited quantity and at the least expense in gathering. Ochres of the finest kind and every shade and hue are here by the million tons.

It would appear that many towns that have achieved greatness in wealth and population have done so with far less opportunities than are here offered. This has happened because men with unbending resolution and tireless purpose so determined. When such men say so here, the supreme moment has arrived and a career of prosperity opens before us. Yet, in the light of recent developments in more than one of our great cities, it is perhaps a question whether commercial greatness is to be desired; certainly not if with such prosperity must come the fraud and corruption that pervade municipal government as shown at the Empire city. Yet, better things already promise, and it is to be hoped that the occasion that furnishes the instances of such wholesale demoralization and colossal robbery will not fail to provide their cure.

EQUINOX

STATE ITEMS.

Reuben Derby of Bristol, aged 84, walked from Huntington to Bristol, a distance of 16 miles Monday, Nov. 13th. The snow was from four to six inches deep.

A student in Middlebury College reciting in Trigonometry, defined a compass as a four cornered square box standing on a three-legged tripod which always points to the north. The Professor fainted.

Miss Eliza Lyman of East Greensboro, has contracted to furnish the timber for the water tank and depot building that are soon to be constructed on the great bend of the Lamoille Valley railroad near the place. Quite an enterprise, that, for a young lady to make.

The slate interest in Poultney and vicinity has been very successful the past year, probably twice the amount of shipments have been made this season that there has been in any one year before. The heavy demands upon the stock of slate during the season leaves a limited supply at present, and most of the quarries will employ a good working force during the winter.

A rare and singular bird for Vermont was caught by Mr. Maxwell Benis, in the vicinity of Brattleboro, on one of the stormy mornings recently, near the Connecticut river. It is known to ornithologists as alca alle, Lath, or the Sea Dove Greenland Dove, Little Auk, Little Guillemot, Ice Bird, Pigeon Diver, etc. It is peculiarly an Arctic bird, as its nativity is within the the Artic circle, and it is found most numerous as the pole is approached.

Mrs. Downey, of Castleton, a fine old Irish lady, of sixty or seventy years of age, arose from her bed one morning early; it being quite dark she became bewildered and in wandering around the house she finally opened a second story window, imagining it to be a door, walked out and fell to the ground, a distance of 12 or 15 feet. Some of her limbs were broken, and she was discovered soon after daylight, in an insensible condition, by one of the neighbors. Her husband, an aged and infirm man, was still in the house asleep. She is still alive.

Surprise parties are very pleasant things if properly understood. but if they are mistaken for anything else, the consequences are apt to be a trifle awkward, to say the least. A large company of ladies and gentlemen in Bridport arranged one of these parties the other night and carried with them an unlimited quantity of provisions, expecting to have a fine supper. But the lady supposed, the affair to be a sort of donation visit, and very coolly deposited the good thing in the pantry. The party waited till 3 a. m., for supper to be ready, but no signs of preparation being visible, they departed as hungry as bears, and likely to have their next party better understood.

The annual election for village officers at Brattleboro will take place on Monday evening. Gen. Phelps has issued a ticket headed anti Masonic, having the names of several prominent citizens for the offices to be filled, some of them being put on without their knowledge or consent.
