Pardon, the complainant, declares that coation was a linen barge bearing the logenal: "Hearst and Coler Veiuntear."

While at the automobile show last month Pardon ran across Dardalmas and identified him as the man who had disappeared with his motor cycle. Calling a pollouman he had the enginer placed under arrest, an indictment followed and the case got to trial to-day. After a jury had been impanelled, Ameliant Darici-Attorney Marshall contains for the People, dwelling on the evidence of the overcoat.

"We will prova," said Mr. Marshall, that this is the defendant's coat."

"It think not," interposed Abraham Levy, counsel for Dardalmas, "You have made a mistake there."

"We will prove," said Mr. Marshall, that this is the defendant's coat."
"I think not," Interposed Abraham Levy, counsel for Dardalmas, "You have made a mistake there."
"There is no mistake about it," rejoined the Assistant District-Attorney, "If your client isn't guilty let him try on this coat. It it does not fit him we will let him go."
"I'll take you up," cried Mr. Levy, after consulting with his client.
The defendant stood up and Mr. Marshall helped him on with the coat, patting down the collar with the gesture of a tallor.
"I think it's a bully fiit," said the prosecutor.

The Judge No Judge.

There's no fit about it." argued the lawyst, "h is too tight. Why, if the defendant stretched in that cost it would burst. I appeal to the jury if it's a fit." Juror No. 7 got up and asked: "Did you have that cost made to order or only it ready made?"

"He didn't buy it at all," returned Mr. Levy. "It is not his cost."
"I think it's a pretty good fit," urged Juror Nb. 7.
"It doesn't fit at all," retorted Juror Nb. 7. No. 8 "It withkies at the collar," spoke up

"It wankles at the collar," spoke up the foreman.

"It settles on the shoulders amooth emoust," chimed in Juror No. 3.

"A fittle too short in the arma," suggesses No. 4. Jurige Cowing intervened at this juncture and said:

"There seems to be too much diversity of opinion about the fit of this coat, sentlemen, so I think that we had better go shead and take evidence." Thereunon the trial proceeded.

Mr. Pardon took the stand and told about the vanishing of his motorcycle. He was very postive in his identification of the prisoner. George F. Schultz, of No. 169 East One Hundred and Twentieth street, a plumber, who was in the garage when the motorcycle was stolen, also identified the defendant.

"Ans you sure he is the man?" asked Mr. Levy.

"Postive," answered the plumber. "I Positive," answered the plumber. "I could identify him without seeing his face as his ears stick out so far. I'd give him the hello at any time."

Another friend of Mr. Pardon's. Thomas G. Lynn, was not so sure in his identification. He told about a visit he past to the Dardalmas home in Brooklyn, when he searched the house with Mrs. Dardalmas's permission. He found no trace of the motor-cycle, though there was a quantity of makingry in the back yard.
