Mrs. Ducas Quickly Tired of Him, Declares Manufacturer in Answer to Suit.

"GOOD FOR NOTHING."

Admits He May Have Called Her That in Presence of Their Son.

That the making of a fortune is shild's play compared with a man's understanding of women was virtually admitted by Benjamin P. Ducas, head of the Ducas Chemical Manufacturing Company, in an answer filed in the Su-preme Court to-day to the suit for separation brought by his comely young wife, Mrs. Rachel N. Ducas.

Ducas has qualified as an expert on the wiles of women. Moreover, after nearly twelve years of married life he says he has succeeded in convincing his wife that he is "an excellent father, but bum husband."

Ducas was thirty-seven years old and his wife was only twenty when they married, after a romantic courtship, at Mulhausen, Alsace-Lorraine, Aug. 16,

"Almost immediately after our marriage." said the wealthy chemical manufacturer, "my wife manifested a lack of love for me. Her only reason for marrying me settened to be because she believed I was wealthy and she could satisfy her luxurious desires." MAY HAVE CALLED HER A

Admitting that she was "an attractive young woman of some refinement and culture" when he married her, Ducas declared he soon afterwards by "GOOD FOR NOTHING." clared he soon afterwards learned that she was imperious and extravagant. He added that he may have told her in the presence of their son, Robert, now ten years old, that she was "lavy." years old, that she was "lazy," sod-for-nothing," and a "fool."

"good-for-nothing," and a living apart under a separation agree-ment, by the terms of which Ducas agreed to give his wife $6,000 a year for her support. Wrs. Ducas complained to the Court that she could not possibly live on so small a sum. When she married Ducas, she said, she was led to believe he would support her in the manner to which she had been accusmed as the daughter of a prosperous and aristocrat French merchant.

The firemen were over three Rouse in subduing the blaze, which burned out the tenth floor and part of the roof. They would not have succeeded in checking the progress of the flames even in that period had they not fought the fire with the standpipe connections on the ninth floor of an adjacent building.

An interesting feature of the fire was that America's supply of real Mocha and Java coffee, at least the greater part of it, went up in smoke. Although every offee house and grocery store in the country advertises Mocha and Java, there are but a handful of concerns in this city that really have either. The name has come to be simply a trade name, intended to guil the innocent into paying a nigher price for a cheap Brazillian berry or some other interior kind.

There are a few old epicures who know the faste and will have nothing eise, and big pure food houses, like Leggett's, rater to these by giving them the genuine article.

So there were probably only a few hundred bags of the real article in America, and much of it went up in smoke to-day when the fire startied in the pure food kitchens of the Leggett establishment. Only the softer and spicepart of the kitchens was affected. The candy and preserve sections were not damaged. The cause of the fire was unknown, and it is believed that a heavy water damage resulted, as the ninth and eighth floors and basement of the Leggett Company's clace were flooded.
