THE TRIBUNE.

NEW-YORK, FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 11, 1841.

Commerce of the U. States.—Among the Documents accompanying the President's Message, was a communication from the Secretary of State on the subject of our Foreign Commerce, published at length in the National Intelligencer of Wednesday. The first part of it relates to the collection of the tax laid by the Danish Government on the cargoes of vessels passing through the Sound into or out from the Baltic Sea. The right of Denmark to lay these duties has been recognized by European Governments, and has never been denied by us. The tariff of 1845, appended to the treaty between Denmark and Holland regulated the payment of these duties. The intention of its framers was undoubtedly to fix a duty of about one per cent. ad valorem on the articles therein enumerated; but the change in the value of many of these commodities, especially in cotton, rice, sugar, tobacco, rum, and the other articles which form the chief Exports of the United States, has increased the ad valorem from one per centum to three, four and even seven. On all articles moreover, not enumerated in this ancient tariff a subsequent treaty stipulated that those nations who have treaties with Denmark, including the United States, shall pay an ad valorem of one per cent.; but the value of these articles being fixed by rules known only to the Danish Government, this duty appears uncertain and fluctuating and its estimate is left very much to the arbitrary discretion of the Custom-house Officers at Elsinore.

It has been contended by some of the public writers in Denmark that the goods of privileged nations, or those who have treaties with Denmark, carried in the vessels of unprivileged nations should be placed on the same footing with those of the latter, and be taxed one and a quarter per cent., and also that the limitation should be confined to the direct trade.

In consequence of the compulsory delay at Elsinore of vessels having no other occasion to stop than that which arises from the necessity of paying these Sound dues, an additional expense of port-charge, pass-money, light-money, &c. is incurred. The whole amount thus paid to the Government of Denmark within a period of eight months by vessels of the United States, none of which were bound for nor intended to stop at any port in Denmark except compulsorily at Elsinore for the purpose of complying with these exactions, must have exceeded $160,000.

The Secretary therefore thought it expedient to bring this subject to the President's notice, in order that instructions might be given to our Representative at Denmark to enter into friendly negotiations with that Government, with a view to securing to ourselves a full participation in any arrangement respecting these duties, which may be granted to the Commerce of other States.

FROM AFRICA.—Papers have been received in the city from Liberia to the 19th of March. The Commercial Advertiser gives a summary of their contents, from which we compile the following. An important case was tried at Monrovia before Gov. Roberts and a jury on the 9th of February. It was an indictment against Captain Jackson of the British schooner Guineaman, charged with trading with the natives contrary to an ordinance of the colony. It was proved that he had received on board his vessel a quantity of palm oil at Lara Cove from natives. In his defence it was alleged that he did not receive it in the way of trade with the natives, but only as part payment of a debt due him by a native living beyond the limits of the colony. The charge of the Judge was against him, and he was found guilty and fined $373, being four times the value of the oil. Jackson protested vehemently against this and read a letter from the Foreign Office of Great Britain stating that an inquiry would be made into the alleged molestation of British trade by some settlers from the United States on a portion of the Western coast of Africa.

A light took place between a British Cruiser called the Termagant and a Spanish Slaver. The Cruiser had but twenty-two men and one of her boats was very frail. The Spaniards fired on her first with ball, then with grape, and finally with musket shot; the Spanish snappers were seen running with blood and it was supposed that many on board were killed by fire from the boats. The Cruiser's boat was sunk by a discharge of grape, which killed one man and wounded two others. The commander of the Slaver was seen to prevent his men from firing on the Termagant while her crew were picking up the men from the boat and afterwards launched a boat for her use.

The brig Greening, Capt. Sexton, from Norfolk, arrived on the 10th of March, with Rev. Mr. Campbell and lady, Rev. Mr. Alward and lady, and a female teacher, sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; they are bound to Cape Palmas and the Kroo Country. The G. had also forty-one emigrants.

A native missionary Chapel has been built at Montrovia by the Methodist Mission. The Anniversary of the Methodist Missionary Society was celebrated at Monrovia on the 16th of January. After suitable addresses, eight gentlemen were made life members of the parent body, by a subscription of $160.

The Liberia annual conference commenced its session at Monrovia on the 14th of January, and continued until the 20th. It appears that the number of members belonging to the Methodist Church in Liberia is 922, and 104 children attached to the Sabbath schools.

Dr. W. H. Taylor, one of the missionaries, died at Monrovia on the 3d of February.

The number of steamboat arrivals at Cleveland, Ohio, during 1840 was 1029, and the aggregate amount of tonnage of vessels and boats 477,960 tons. There were exported, during the same period, from the same place to the Canadas, 286,550 bushels of wheat, and 70,995 barrels of flour.

The Crops in Chester Co. Pa.—The Village Record says: "We have consulted our Agricultural friends, and looked upon their farms, and they concur in the promise of luxuriant grass and grain crops, should the season continue favorable. The clover fields are blooming and fragrant; they look rich and pleasing, and so do the farmers. From other sections of the country, the accounts are equally favorable, giving reason to believe this will be a year of national plenty."

The examination at West Point commenced on Monday last, and the Board of Visitors organized by electing Commodore Charles Stewart President, and C. B. Haddock, New-Hampshire, Secretary.

BARNABY RUDGE.

A New Story by Ba.

CHAPTER XXIV.

How the accomplished gentleman spent the evening in the midst of a dazzling and brilliant circle; how he enchanted all those with whom he mingled by the grace of his deportment, the politeness of his manner, the vivacity of his conversation, and the sweetness of his voice; how it was observed in every corner that Chester was a man of that happy disposition that nothing ruffled him, that he was one on whom the world's cares and errors sat as lightly as his dress, and in whose smiling face a calm and tranquil mind was constantly reflected; how honest men, who by instinct knew him better, bowed down before him nevertheless, deferred to his every word, and courted his favorable notice; how people, who really had good in them, went with the stream, and fawned and flattered, and approved, and despised themselves while they did so, and yet had not the courage to resist; how, in short, he was one of those who are received and cherished in society (as the phrase is) by scores who individually would shrink from and be repelled by the object of their lavish regard; are things of course which will suggest themselves. Matter so commonplace needs but a passing glance, and there an end.

The despisers of mankind—apart from the mere fools and mimics, of that creed—are of two sorts. They who believe their merit neglected and unappreciated, make up one class; they who receive adulation and flattery, knowing their own worthlessness, compose the other. Be sure that the coldest-hearted misanthropes are ever of the last order. Mr. Chester sat up in bed next morning, sipping his coffee, and remembering with a kind of contemptuous satisfaction how he had shone last night, and how he had been caressed and courted, when his servant brought in a very small scrap of dirty paper, tightly sealed in two places, on the inside whereof was inscribed in pretty large text these words: "A friend. Desiring of a conference. Immediate. Private. Burn it when you've read it."

"Where in the name of the Gunpowder Plot did you pick up this?" said his master.

It was given him by a person then waiting at the door, the man replied.

"With a cloak and dagger?" said Mr. Chester.

"With nothing more threatening about him, it appeared, than a leather apron and a dirty face. 'Let him come in.' In he came—Mr. Tappertit; with his hair still on end, and a great lock in his hand, which he put down on the floor in the middle of the chamber as if he were about to go through some performances in which it was a necessary agent.

"Sir," said Mr. Tappertit, with a low bow, "I thank you for this condescension, and am glad to see you. Pardon the menial office in which I am engaged, sir, and extend your sympathies to one who, humble as his appearance is, has in hard workings far above his station."

Mr. Chester held the bed-curtain farther back, and looked at him with a vague impression that he was some maniac, who had not only broken open the door of his place of confinement, but had brought away the lock. Mr. Tappertit bowed again, and displayed his legs to the best advantage.

"You have heard, sir," said Mr. Tappertit, laying his hand upon his breast, "of G. Varden Lark-smith and his bell-hanger and repairs seated in town and country, Clerkenwell, London?"

"What then?" asked Mr. Chester.

"I am his 'prentice, sir."

"What then?"

"Ahem!" said Mr. Tappertit. "Would you permit me to shut the door sir, and will you further, sir, give me your honour bright, that what passes between us is in the strictest confidence?"

Mr. Chester laid himself calmly down in bed again, and turning a perfectly undisturbed face toward the strange apparition, which had by this time closed the door, begged him to speak out, and to be as rational as he could, without putting himself to any very great personal inconvenience.

"In the first place, sir," said Mr. Tappertit, producing a small pocket-handkerchief, and shaking it out of the folds, "as I have not a card about me (for the envy of masters debases us below that level) allow me to offer the best substitute that circumstances will admit. If you will take that in your own hand, sir, and cast your eye on the right-hand corner," said Mr. Tappertit, offering it with a graceful air, "you will meet with my credentials."

"Thank you," answered Mr. Chester, politely accepting it, and turning to some blood-red characters at one end— "Four. Simon Tappertit. One?" Is that the—

"Without the numbers, sir, that is my name," replied the 'prentice. "They are merely intended as directions to the washerwoman, and have no connection with myself or family. Your name, sir," said Mr. Tappertit, looking very hard at his nightcap, "is Chester, I suppose? You need not pull it off, sir, thank you. I observe E. C. from here. We will take the rest for granted."

"Pray, Mr. Tappertit," said Mr. Chester, "has that complicated piece of ironmongery which you have done me the favour to bring with you, any immediate connection with the business we are to discuss?"

"It has not, sir," rejoined the 'prentice. "It's going to be fitted on a ware-house door in Thames Street."

"Perhaps, as that is the case," said Mr. Chester, "and as it has a stronger flavor of oil than I usually refresh my bedroom with, you will oblige me so far as to put it outside the door?"

"By all means, sir," said Tappertit, suiting the action to the word.

"You'll excuse my mentioning it, I hope?"

"Don't apologise, sir, I beg. And now, if you please, to business."

During the whole of this dialogue, Mr. Chester had suffered nothing but his smile of unvarying serenity and politeness to appear upon his face. Sim Tappertit, who had far too good an opinion of himself to suspect that any body could be playing upon him, thought within himself that he was something like the respect to which he was entitled, and drew a comparison from this courteous demeanor of a stranger, by no means favorable to the worthy locksmith.

"From what passes in our house," said Mr. Tappertit, "I am aware that your son keeps company with a young lady against your inclinations. Sir, your son has not used me well."

"Mr. Tappertit," said the other, "you grieve me beyond description."

"Thank you, sir," replied the 'prentice. "I'm glad to hear you say so. He's very proud, sir, is your son; very haughty."

of me, 'how is this to be prevented?' I'll tell you how if an honest, civil, smiling gentleman like you—

"Mr. Tappertit—really—"

"No, no, I'm serious," rejoined the 'prentice, "I am, upon my soul. If an honest, civil, smiling gentleman like you, was to talk but ten minutes to our old woman—that's Mrs. Varden—and flatter her up a bit, you'd gain her over for ever. Then there's this point got—that her daughter Dolly;—jere a flush came over Mr. Tappertit's face—

"wouldn't be allowed to be a go-between from that time forward; and till that point's got, there's nothing ever will prevent her. Mind that."

"Mr. Tappertit, your knowledge of human nature—"

"Wait a minute," said Sim, folding his arms with a dreadful calmness. "Now I come to the point. Sir, there is a villain at that Maypole, a mouster in human shape, a vagabond of the deepest dye, that unless you get rid of, and have kidnapped and carried off at the very least—nothing less will do—will marry your son to that young woman, as certainly and surely as if he was the Archbishop of Canterbury himself. He will, sir, for the hatred and malice he bears to you; let alone the pleasure of doing a bad action, which to him is its own reward. If you know how this chap, this Joseph Willet—that's his name—comes backward and forward to our house, libelling, and denouncing, and threatening you, and how I shudder when I hear him, you'd hate him worse than I do, worse than I do, sir."

Mr. Tappertit wildly, putting his hair up straighter, and making a crunching noise with his teeth; "if such a thing is possible."

"A little private vengeance in this, Mr. Tappertit?"

"Private vengeance, sir, or public sentiment, or both combined—destroy him," said Mr. Tappertit. "Miggs says so too. Miggs and me both say so. We can't bear the plotting and under-mining that takes place. Our souls recoil from it. Barnaby Rudge and Mrs. Rudge are in it likewise; but the villain, Joseph Willet, is the ringleader. Their plotting and schemes are known to me and Miggs. If you want information of 'em, apply to us. Put Joseph Willet down, sir—destroy him—crush him—and be happy."

With these words, Mr. Tappertit, who seemed to expect no reply, and to hold it as a necessary consequence of his eloquence that his hearer should be utterly stunned, dumb-founded and overwhelmed, folded his arms so that the palm of each hand rested on the opposite shoulder, and disappeared after the manner of these mysterious warners of whom he had read in cheap story-books.

"That fellow," said Mr. Chester, relaxing his face when he was fairly gone, "is good practice. I have some command of my features, but all doubt. He fully confirms what I suspected, though; and blunt tools are sometimes found of use, where sharper instruments would fail. I fear I may be obliged to make great havoc among these worthy people. A trouble-some necessity! I quite feel for them."

With that he fell into a quiet slumber;—subside into such a gentle, pleasant sleep, that it was quite infantine.
