LITERARY ITEMS.

T. R. Dawley & Co. are about to issue "The American Publishers', Booksellers', and Stationers' Catalogue," containing in a single volume a uniform list of every publisher in the United States and Canada. It is intended to publish the work annually, and distribute it gratis among the members of the Trade in this country.

G. P. Putnam & Son announce the revival of "Putnam's Magazine," of which a new series will shortly be commenced. The high position attained by this favorite periodical as an organ of intelligent criticism, vigorous essays and sketches, and attractive popular literature, will insure it a warm welcome in its new form. The names of the contributors to the Magazine have not yet been made public, but it is certain that they will include many of the representatives of the purest taste and the most advanced culture in the country. Among the young men now coming forward into active life are not a few brilliant and powerful writers whose fresh blood, it is to be hoped, will be mingled with the stock of former years, giving assurance that the new "Putnam" will keep pace with the progressive spirit of the age.

The professors of Natural Philosophy in Edinburgh and Glasgow have produced the first volume of a more thorough treatise upon Natural Philosophy than has been hitherto attempted. It will form four substantial octavo volumes, of which the first, more than 700 pages thick, appears this week. In smaller type it adds to the full account of what is known of natural philosophy, a full connected outline of the mathematical processes by which knowledge has been extended into regions hitherto unexplored by experiment.

The Continental papers publish a characteristic letter from M. Alexandre Dumas to the Emperor Napoleon. Being unable to obtain from one of the public libraries of Paris certain documents which he required to give historical accuracy to a novel on which he is now engaged—"Les Blancs et les Bleus"—he addressed the subjoined communication to the head of the State: "Illustrious Confrère—When you undertook to write the 'Life of the Conqueror of the Gauls,' all the libraries were eager to place at your disposal the documents which they contain. The result is a work superior to others, in the circumstance that it brings together the greatest number of historical documents. Engaged at the present moment in writing the life of another Cæsar, named Napoleon Bonaparte, I require documents relating to his appearance on the scene of this world. In brief, I should like to have all the pamphlets which the 13 Vendémiaire brought forth. I have asked for them at the library; they have been refused. There remains to me no other means than to apply to you, my illustrious confrere, to whom nothing is refused, to beg you to ask for these works in your own name, at the library, and to be good enough, when you shall have received them, to place them at my disposal. If you will be so kind as to grant this request, you will have rendered me a service which, in a literary sense, I shall never forget. I have the honor to be, with respect, illustrious author of the 'Life of Cæsar,' Your very humble and most grateful confrere, ALEXANDRE DUMAS." The next day the writer received through M. Duruy the pamphlets asked for. We hope that in gratitude he will dedicate the forthcoming novel to his "illustrious confrère."
