LOUBET MAY VISIT US.
SPEAKS OF FRANCE TO BE INVITED TO THE St. LOUIS EXPOSITION.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The commission charged with the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis have failed to agree on the location of the fair, and conversation of the proposals for the site was not continued.

Mr. G. L. Judah, President of the commission, announced that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.

Mr. Judah said that the commission had been asked to consider several sites, and that the public would have to determine which of these was the best.

Mr. Judah added that the commission had been asked to consider the selection of sites for the next World's Fair in Chicago and the City Council of the metropolis, and that the public would have to give the matter due consideration before any definite decision could be made.