Bavaria's Insane Monarch Will Be Fifty-seven To-morrow.

Although bunting and flags will be displayed to-morrow throughout the kingdom of Bavaria in ob-servance of the fifty-seventh birthday of King Otho, yet there will be no popular rejoicings or even official celebrations. They would be singularly inappropriate, since they would merely serve to call attention to the piliable condition of this moncan attended to the pitable condition of this mon-arch, who, ever since his accession to to throne nineteen years ago, through the mysterio and tragic death of his elder brother in the waters of Lake Staremberg, has been in such a state of paretic imbecility as to render it necessary that he should be kept, not merely under restraint, but in the strictest seclusion. In fact, he has been imprisoned all these years in the Palace of Furstenried, which is guarded by picked soldiers and surrounded by a lofty wall that prevents the public from obtaining a glimpse of the grounds.

Only once since his accession have his subjects obtained a fleeting gilmpse of him. It was shortly after he became King. Managing in some way to effect his escape from Furstenried, he fled to Munich without being stopped anywhere, and, entering the court Church of St. Michael, threw himself down on his knees before the high altar and in loud and impassioned tones began to besech the Almighty to restore reason to the afflicted King Otho, in order that he might be enabled to fulfil his duties and obligations to his dear Bavarian people. There was a considerable number of people in the church at the time, and there is no knowing what might have happened had not some of the attendant priests, one of whom belonged to the adjoining Jesuit college, recognized the identity of the stalwart stranger-he is considerably over six feet in height-and gently led him into the sacristy, where he was detained until the court officials could be nicated with.

Had he been recognized by the public it is more than probable that a riot would have ensued, for furing the first few years that followed the death of King Louis the masses of Bavaria, especially the peasantry, were firmly convinced that Louis had been put out of the way by Bismarck, and that Otho was perfectly sane, and merely kept under restraint as a maniac because of his disinclination to comply with Prussia's demands. So firmly convinced were the people that the good old regent was a creature of Bismarck's that during the first ten years of his administration of the kingdom, his statues, busts, and even pictures, were constantly being defaced and mutilated. Now, the tide has turned in his favor. His declination of the repeated offers of the crown which have been made to him, and his refusal to touch one cent of the royal civil list, which until new has been devoted to the liquidation of the colossal debts left by King Louis, have endeared him to his countrymen and won for him respect and esteem, both at home and abroad.

There is no doubt, however, that in declining the roffered crown of his incurably demented nephew he has acted in conformity with the wishes of the masses of the Bavarian people, and it speaks volumes for the strength of the monarchical and legitimist sentiment among them that they should refer a lunatic on their throne rather than any nterference with the line of succession.

MAY LIVE FOR YEARS YET.

King Otho is neither better nor worse than he has been for many years past, and bids fair to live another ten, or even twenty, years. He has the best medical care and attendance possible, and although his death would be a relief to his country and to Germany, his physicians do all in their power to prolong his existence. He occupies a suite of apartments on the ground floor of the palace, the doors of which, as well as the outside door leading into the garden, are always left open in the daytime, as a closed door immediately excites his rage. He seems suspicious of restraint, and his attendants conceal as much as possible an appearance of authority over his movements.

Two of the most prominent physicians of Munich are in attendance on alternate weeks, and on every Sunday the director of the State Insane Asylum visits the palace to examine the King. Twice a year elaborate reports on his condition, signed by the principal medical authorities of the kingdom, presented to both houses of the legislature The King is weited upon by an entire household, composed of a general, of several aides-de-camp, and of chamberlains, all of them nobles, who may be said to devote their lives to looking after him. He is treated, as far as possible, with all the honors and ceremony due to his rank, though this must sometimes be a trial. For there have been casions when the King imagined himself to be a stork, insisted on building a huge nest of twigs in a corner of one of his rooms, and then attempted to imitate the long billed bird by endeavor-ing to stand first on one leg, and then on the the skirts of the long black fronk aget which he invariably wears, added to the grotesqueness of his appearance, conveying as they did, an impression of flapping wings. He has a big bushy beard, formerly black, but now said to be very gray. He will not allow it to be trimmed. He is extremely fond of cigarettes, and smokes about fifty a day. Every time he lights a cigarette be burns a whole box of matches, and seems to enjoy the noise and

THE HISTORIC HOUSE OF STANHOPE.

Lord Stanhope, whose death has just taken place in England, was a brother of the Hon. Philip Stanhope, who was in this country last year at the head of the English delegation to the International Parliamentary Congress at St. Louis, and the earl will be chiefly remembered in the United States in conion with his vigorous opposition to the action of the English government in restoring to the American people the log of the Mayflower. Indeed, the late Lord Stanhope actually went to the length of moving in the House of Lords a petition to the Crown to put a stop to this act of international

After this it will hardly be necessary to add that he was not a descendant of the great Earl Chatham, and that there is no truth in the story frequently printed to the effect that he was the nearest surviving kinsman of England's famous Premier, William Pitt. His great-grandfather, the third Earl of Stanhope, an avowed and ardent Republican and a friend of Robespierre, married Lord Chatham's daughter-that is to say, William Pitt's sister-and of this marriage the eccentric Lady Hester Stanhope, favorite niece and housekeeper of Pitt, fiancée of General Sir John Moore, the victor of Corunna, and the heroine of so many fantastic romances, was the offspring. She died in the most mysterious fashion in Palestine, as the wife of an Arab shelk. After the death of her mother, her father-that is to say, the third Earl Stanhope-married again, and the present lord, as well as the Hon. Caspar Hauser, it may be recalled, was murdered in a manner as myste rious as the circumstances of his discovery, just at the very moment when Lord Stanhope had made all the preparations to inaugurate the fight in behalf of his rights.

To the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: In course of the last week the New-York papers have devoted considerable space to the alleged cure of a case of cancer at the Flower Hospital, and in almost every instance the statements concerning the same have been inaccurate As my name is mentioned in connection with the matter in your issue of to-day, and as the statements therein are not whelly accurate, I beg you will kindly find space for the following:

Desiring to obtain radium under conditions that would curtail its activity less than when contained in glass tubes, I asked Mr. Lieber if it were feasible to coat radium on rods or needles in such a way that the greater part of the efficiency of the radium would be preserved. Mr. Lieber said that he was already experimenting in this direction, and believed that he could furnish what I asked for. In due season he did furnish me with some small celluloid rods or needles coated with a salt of radium dissolved in a proper solvent and protected by a suitable covering that would not materially impair the efficiency of the original radium. Through the courtesy of the physicians at the Flower Hospital I was enabled physicians at the Flower Hospital I was embeddent of experiment with these needles on a case of cancer on the ankle. The result demonstrated the activity and efficiency of the needles, but the supply thereof gave out before the case was entirely cured, and other treatment was then substituted. The radium applications were made in December last.

cured, and other treatment was not in December last.

The radium applications were made in December last.

The statement in your issue of to-day that Mr. Lieber was my agent in their manufacture is incorrect.

It is further stated that I had treated six or seven cases with the "gaseous" emanation from radium without doing much good. In reference to which I beg to say that I have never treated any case with the gaseous emanation, that is, apart from whatever emanation might be given off through contact with the needles in the single case referred to at the Flower Hospital.

So far as I am aware Mr. Lieber, who is a chemist and importer and dealer in radium, was the first to devise a method whereby radium can be utilized in the manner described. An account by him of his experiments will be found in the April number of the "Archives of the Roentgen Ray."

My desire in sending this is to make it clear that Mr. Lieber is the inventor of the method of applying radium to celluloid rods and disks, and that I made practical use of his invention, just as that I made practical use of his invention, just as applying radium that I made practical use of me that I made practical use of me that I might of any other invention New-York, April 25, 1905.

[It is obvious from this letter that Hugo Lieber, in his communication to "The New-York Medical Journal," did not intend to disavow the authorship of the device employed by Dr. Piffard, but merely to say that he had not used it. Reference to "The Medical Record's" report of the last meeting of the County Medical Society shows that the experiments with the gaseous emanation from radium, erroneously imputed to Dr. Piffard, were described by another physician, Dr. Wendell C. Phillips.]

It is expected that all the members of the Players who are in town and the other friends of the dead actor will attend. Dr. Houghton has arranged for a suitable musical programme. It had been hoped by the Players that the body of Mr. Jefferson would remain in state in the church on its way to Buzzard's Bay. Charles B. Jefferson, his son, however, replied to Harrison B. Hodges and Daniel Frohman that his father had desired that his funeral be as modest as possible, and that the services should be held at Buzzard's Bay.

At a meeting of the Actors' Order of Friendship, Edwin Forrest Lodge No. 2, of which Mr. Jefferson was a member, resolutions of regret and esteem were yesterday passed.

Speaker, Mr. Darrell said:

Our next toast is "The Day We Celebrate." I am happy to say that we have with us this evening the Ambassador-elect to the Court of St. James, Whitelaw Reid, who, after many persistent and very urgent appeals by the members of the committee and myself, has agreed to say a few words to this toast. He leaves us shortly not as a stranger, but to renew the friendships made when he was Special Ambassador at the time of the jubilee of our late beloved Queen, Victoria, and also in the same capacity to the coronation of his most gracious majesty King Edward VII.

Why not add a manicurer to his shop force? So, looking around town, he found an attractive, blue-eyed maiden, who said that she thoroughly understood the art of manicuring. He engaged her at once, expecting to fill his strong box with Columbia cash.

The faculty, however, ever watchful over the interests of the students, said that no such scandalous performance could be permitted on the university grounds, and the young woman is not in evidence as the star attraction of the barber shop. The manager is grievously disappointed, and the students are divided into two classes—those whoare rejoicing over cash saved and those who are indulging in some naughty words about the action of the faculty.

ANGLO-AMERICAN UNITY.

Annual Dinner. Occident and Orient vied with each other in paying tribute to the mother country and the ory of St. George at the 119th annual dinner of the St. George's Society of New-York at Delmonico's last night. Long before the coffee nounced merely as an annual dinner was transformed into a veritable Anglo-American love feast. "Yankee Doodle" followed "God Save the King" and "The Star Spangled Banner," and all were equally applauded.

Throughout the speechmaking Englishmen paid high tribute to Americans, and Americans | part: returned the compliment, giving a good Roland for each verbal Oliver received. The speakers and their themes were: Sir Percy Sanderson, 'His Majesty's Representatives"; Whitelaw Reid, "The Day We Celebrate"; Baron Kantaro Kaneko, "The Anglo-Japanese Advance"; Job E. Hedges, "The Land We Live In," and the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, "The Colonies."

In addition to the speakers, the men at the guests' table included Edward F. Darrell, who presided; Morris P. Ferris, Charles S. Bryan, the Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan, Wallace Downey, George G. De Witt, Mornay Williams, Frank Hasbrouck, the Rev. Arthur H. Judge, Marian J. Verdery and Richard T. Davies.

MR. DARRELL'S SPEECH OF WELCOME. After toasts to the President of the United States and the King of England were drunk, Mr. Darrell made an address of welcome, saying in part:

the Baltic raised a cloud for a short time, but this has passed away, and I trust nothing more will mar the bright horizon. I feel that the settlement of this affair is a step towards arbitration, which in this enlightened age should be the means of settling all international disputes. In this respect, you may all of you do your share in cementing the good fellowship which now exists between this glorious country of our adoption and the land or our forefathers. When Great Britain and America stand shoulder to shoulder, we feel that the cause of peace is shoulder, we feel that the cause of peace is strengthened.

The personal bravery displayed on both sides has won our admiration, but we cannot help deploring the terrible loss of human life, which this war has entailed, and we can only hope for its speedy termination.

SIR PERCY SANDERSON SPEAKS.

In introducing Sir Percy Sanderson Mr. Darrell said Sir Percy had graced the position of president of the society for years, adding: "Although his duties as consul general have doubtless been very onerous, his interest in St. George's Society has never flagged, and I am glad to be able to say that he is now one of our life members, and we shall always have the name of Sir Percy Sanderson on our roll." Sir Percy said in part:

Formation that can be obtained, possibly a little something besides. This we do know, that our principal common interests are peace and the maintenance of good relations between the two countries. In these matters his majesty him self takes a leading part, and when at the same time we have Lord Lausdowne and Mr. Choate in London, and Mr. Hay and Sir Mortimer Durand in Washington, we feel that these vital interests can hardly be in better hands.
But on an occasion-like this it is not merely the diplomatic nor, indeed, consular representatives that we have in mind. There are others who are quite as much entitled to be classed as his majesty's representatives, and the receptions accorded to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to those eminent members of his majesty sopposition Mr. John Morley and Mr. James Bryce, as well as to the numerous members of the scientific and industrial societies who have visited this country within the last twelve months, are evidence of that good fellowship which so happily exists and which every British subject himself, in a sense a representative of his country, will, I have no doubt, do his best to maintain.

MR. REID'S SPEECH.

After three cheers had been given for Mr. Reid and he had been saluted by "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," Mr. Reid began his speech. It was listened to with close interest throughout, and was frequently interrupted by applause. Mr. Reid said:

thusiastically. After that it is the special toast of your dinner and of your society—a toast primarily and peculiarly English, to which an Englishman might more naturally respond.

And yet, "the day you celebrate" is a day devoted to charity and good cheer; and that is a domain in which, thank God, national lines do not divide. It was an Englishman, two centuries ago, who proclaimed that "In faith and hope the world will disagree, but all mankind's concern is charity."

charity."

To New-Yorkers the St. George's Society stands for English charity and English Christianity. It stands also for British appreciation of America as a place of residence, and British regard for Americans. Through all the changes of the troubled centuries on this island your sway in these fields has never been lost, and indeed not often long or greatly imperilled, from the day the cross of St. George first floated over Castle Garden down to this 129th year of American independence. Long may it endure, to provoke the emulation and inspire the success of the organizations with far greater constituencies that have arisen here since that standard was raised.

it, but merely to cherish what we have and to take every precaution to avert its loss.

Against that danger, you and men like you are the best guarantees. You represent trade, and trade demands peace. You represent good citizenship, and good citizenship always seeks peace with honor. You represent intelligence and culture and character, and these reach out kindred hands, whenever and wherever they encounter each other throughout the world.

Best of all, you know both countries. If only that could be said of all our people on both sides there does not exist in this land, at least, and I do not believe there exists in yours, the power that could then interrupt or imperil the present good understanding between Great Britain and the United States. Even more—there does not exist anywhere in the world the power that could then hinder the two great branches of the English speaking people from advancing, through part:

Were it not for the Anglo-Japanese alliance. France, Germany and other countries would have intervened in the present trouble, and the whole of Europe would have been plunged into war. Japan, England and the United States, guided by that illustrious statesman, John Hay, have always united in the policy of the open door. They have set back the dismemberment of the Chinese Empire. The continuation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is the factor to secure the peace of Asia and the whole world. Japan tries to come not at the front, but at the rear of the United States and England. With the continuance of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, France can maintain unmolested her territory in Tonkin, Cochin-China and Hainan; Germany, Chow Chow and part of the peninsula of Canton, and Russia can maintain unmolested her proper bounds in Siberia, and the United States can enjoy her occupation of the Philippines. enjoy her occupation of the Philippines.
