them in their hopes and discouragements and them in their hopes and discouragements and befriends them in turn, cheering them up in MAY MAKE OR BREAK. their derkest hours by toasting buns for their tes and joining in their bohemian revels When the novelist is ready to hang himself when his book is returned she induces him to piece together the letter which he has torn up in despair, and he discovers that his work has been accepted. She inveigles an art dealer into buying the artist's picture and into writing a letter which assures to the sculptor the prospect of two years in Italy. She is in love with the sculptor, but when he learns to whom he is indebted for his good luck and offers to marry her she refuses to be a drag upon him when he is merely grateful to her. When her romance is ended she joins the boys in a studio dance to the music of a street organ. The little play is full of vivacity and movement, and with Miss Mona Harrison as the drudge there are passages of genuine pathos. With six characters sharply individualized it is a stirring little drama with rollicking humor and an affecting Marchioness of the studio type.

MUSIC.

A CONCERT OF DVORAK'S COMPOSITIONS.

Mr. Walter Damrosch made up a programme of empositions by Antonin Dvorak for the secon Sunday concert of the New York Symphony So-ciety, which took place in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. It is an old plaint that a concert devoted wholly to one man's music is a tiresome thing. It has been uttered when the composer was a Beethoven or a Mozart or a Schubert; and in the majority of cases it has had no validity. When a great creative genius expresses himself in many forms he can remain interesting for two hours; a composer who cannot is not a great creative genius The affectation is of a piece with the protestations which we used to hear so frequently from the self-elected champions of what they called "progress" only a decade or so ago against the symphonic form. Symphonies were antiquated; symphonies were foolish; their movements had no relationship with each other; they were too long, and should give place to the symphonic poem, in which all that a composer needed, or ought, to say was com pacted-said tersely and with rational psychological connection. They were brave words; but soon the representatives of "progress" began to write sym-phonic poems which were longer than the old symphonies and which were without the benison of a pause, and now the same gentlemen are writing symphonies in which a single movement occupies as much time as did the four movements of the

Yesterday's concert demonstrated that an hour and three-quarters of Dr. Dvorak's music need not be wearisome, and yet a desire to give it "popu lar" features prevented it from being in the best sense representative of the Bohemian composer. The five duets ("Klänge aus Mähren"), if designed as a sop for Cerberus, were ineffective, because the young women who sang them falled to make them interesting in any way. They were the Misses Sassard, who, we are told, have made a specialty of duet singing in London and Paris. They are plainly young women of gracious instincts and amiable gifts, but they are not sufficiently blessed with voices to fill such a place as they were put yesterday. The duets are interesting and belong to the compositions which first made Dvorak's name known throughout Europe, others being the two Slavonic Dances with which the concert ended. The programme began with the "Carnival" overture, the second of the three works which the com poser called an "overture-trilogy," and to which he gave a first hearing at the concert in Carnegie Hall on October 21, 1892, with which he signalized the beginning of his activities in America. The next number was the finest fruit of those activities, the symphony "From the New World," to the second movement of which Mr. Damrosch gave a beautiful interpretation, disclosing the excellence of the wood-wind choir of his orchestra as suc cessfully as he did the string band in the remaining instrumental number of the scheme. This was made up of the larghetto and scherzo from the terzetto for two violins and viola, a delightful work, designed originally for the entertainment of the composer's household. It is a fine specimen of chamber music, and took on the richer orchestral garb most gracefully—a thing that cannot always be said when string quartets are played with their voices multiplied. A fine audience in numbers and character heard the concert and applauded generously and with obviously honest fervor.

Since it seems necessary to make Kubelik a vast popular attraction, it is fortunate for those who admire him that he persists in dignifying his surroundings by his programmes as well as his playing. Last night he was the centre of a most extraordinary scene at the Hippodrome, the colossal vast gathering listening as if spellbound to a very pieces were the concerto in A by Sinding, Beethoven's romance in G. Saint-Saëns's Havanaise and Paganini's "Witches' Dance." To these he added the prelude from Bach's sonata in E. for violin alone, and a transcription of Schubert's setting of the "Ave Maria" from Scott's "Lady of the Lake." His orchestral accompaniments were provided by the Russian Symphony Society, under the direction of Modest Altschuler, which con-tributed also a number of pieces, of which a Rusgian group seemed to hit the fancy of the listen-The Sinding concerto had been heard here once before, something over a year ago, from Francis Macmillen. It was a very different thing in the hands of Kubelik, who presented it as a most welcome addition to the violinist's repertory, which is wofully small and hackneyed, as all must admit. It has much rugged strength, much originality in thought and in manner of presentation and a most decided Norse color. Kubelik played it with marvellous spirit, as it appealed to sympathies. He has never played here more brilliently, and, we are tempted to say, never so well did last night. He has grown prodigiously in an artistic sense since he was first heard here

CROWD AT MANHATTAN CONCERT.

There was a large audience at the Manhattan pera House last night at the first Sunday concert of the season-and Mr. Hammerstein was please Numerically the audience was as large as that which attended the opening Sunday concert at this institution on December 10 last. Campanini conducted and the opera orchestra was gathered on the stage.

Many of the principals of the Manhattan company were heard, including Mmes. Bressler-Gianolf, Gerville-Reache, Fannie Francisca, Camille Borello and MM. Albani, Arimondi, Gilibert and Daddi. The concert opened with the march from Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust." Mme. Francisca sang the aria from "La Traviata" and Albani the romance from "La Forza del Destino." After the intermission the orchestra played a selection from Offenbach's "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," a novelty that will be sung by the Manhattan company on

M. Daddi sang with fine spirit several Neapolitan songs, and was generously applauded. Arimondi seve "The Two Grenadiers" and the programme closed with the duet from "Il Trovatore," which sung by Albani and Mme. Bessler-Gianoli, with Charlier at the piano.

HERBERT'S CONCERTS GROW POPULAR.

The interest in Mr. Herbert's popular concerts creasing. The third of these concerts this season was greeted last night by a larger audience than which was present at the first concert. There were two soloists-Mr. Clifford Wiley, barytone, and Mr. John Spurgur, violinist. The first part of the programme was made up of selections from Wagner, Bach, Haydn and Bee thoven. Mr. Herbert afterward rendered several Anglo-German Friendship Depends on London's Reception of Kaiser.

Emperor William's personal magnetism is very great. Even his most savage critics and bitter foes are compelled to concede to him the possession of this gift in an altogether phenomenal degree, and his arrival to-day in England for a stay of some two or three weeks is, save for any unof some two or three weeks is, save for any untoward incident, calculated to accomplish more than negotiations of statesmen and diplomatists toward removing that animosity between Germany and Great Britain which is one of the most serious menaces to the peace of Europe. It is an animosity for which the newspapers of both countries are very largely responsible; and whereas the German press has abstained from any personal attacks upon Edward VII and the English royal family, contenting itself with assailing the royal family, contenting itself with assailing the King's government, the English newspapers have distinguished themselves by the unreasoning virulence of their language concerning Emperor William. No monarch in Christendom has been more persistently ridiculed and vilified. Scarcely a chiefe issue of any comic journal from "Punch" single issue of any comic journal, from "Punch" down to the lowest gutter sheet, but what contained some caricature or lampoon of the Kaiser, while the daily and weekly newspapers contrived to put an uncomplimentary construction upon his every act and every utterance.

This is all the more unfair since England has no better friend in Germany than William II, who was the favorite grandson of the late Queen Vic-toria. The one fault which the German states men and the German people have to find with him is that he is too pronounced in his British sympathies and English ideas. Lord Lonsdale, a patriotic and typical Briton if ever there was one, to whom everything foreign is anathema, and who is, elected, in Parliament, has frequently borne tribute to this, and has likewise called attention to the notorious fact that during the war in South Africa, and particularly during the early stages thereof, the Kaiser almost alone in Germany proclaimed his sympathy with the English, prevented any action by the princes and people of his empire in favor of the Boers, and likewise frustrated attempted organization of a coalition against England to intervene diplomatically, and perhaps otherwise, in the struggle, and to take advantage of her momentary difficulties to exact humiliating oncessions. William showed himself a true friend of the British Empire in those days, and the persistent silence of the English press about the mat-ter can only be construed as due to ill will and ingratitude rather than to mere forgetfulness

The most important feature of the Emperor's visit will be his progress through the streets of the British metropolis on Wednesday to lunch with the Lord Mayor and the Corporation of the ancient city of London at the Guildhall. The thoroughfares through which he will pass will be lined with dense crowds assembled from all parts of a capital that can boast of a population of 7,000,000 inhabitants. Leaving aside the risk of outrage on the part of foreign anarchists, who have long had William on the most sombre page of their black books, no one can tell beforehand what the attitude of a London crowd will be toward a distinguished foreign visitor. It is possible that the crowd may be won, as so many other people have been won, by the gallant bearing of the Kaiser, by his fascinating manner, by the manifest sincerity of his cordiality and by the presence of his gracious consort by his side, and if his welcome is marked by a display of popular enthusiasm it will go far to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two empires and to inaugurate a happier era in Anglo-German re-

It is possible, on the other hand, that the people lining the streets, their minds poisoned for years past by the daily attacks upon him in their newspapers, may display a chilling reserve, nay, may even indulge in hostile manifestations, which, of course, the German and other foreign Socialists in London will do all in their power to originate and to promote. This would naturally still further augment the ill feeling between England and Germany, would strain the relations between the two nations to a critical extent, and would probably put an end once and for all time to William's British sympathies, and championship of England at Berlin. King Edward, shrewd and able statesman that he is, realizes the danger, and knows how impossible it is to control a London mob. That is why he has insisted so strongly upon the Empress accompanying her husband. He realizes that if she is by her husband's side there is less chance of any hostlle demonstration on the part of the mob.

If there is anything of the kind it may be laid wholly at the door of the English press, which, as I have mentioned above, has abused and ridiculed the Emperor for years past in everything save in his private life; and if the newspapers have retraordinary scene at the Hippodrome, the colossal audience room being crowded to the roof and the different order of music than that ordinarily purveyed at Sunday night popular concerts. His set tribute to his blamelessness in this particular, they at home and abroad, that any slanders would be have during the last few weeks contrived to convey the impression that his entourage was of the most unsavory description by emphasizing and expatiating on the horrible details of the Moltke-Harden case and by placing the worst possible construction thereon. Never before has a trial of decently described in English print, and, unreasonknowing what influence these stories of the Harden trial may have upon its attitude, if not toward the Kaiser, at any rate to the officers in his train. There are many people, King Edward first and foremost, who will breathe easier when the Kalser's progress through the streets of London to the Guildhall is safely over without being marked by any untoward event.

> REPORTED BIRTH OF A SON TO LEOPOLD. Baroness Vaughan has just given birth to another boy at the Chateau of Larmoy, in the Department of the Seine-et-Oise, some twelve miles from Paris, which King Leopold rented about three months ago from the American widow of the great sugar refiner Henri Say. Dr. Robert Don net, the physician to King Leopold, and Dr. Paul Bar, the eminent French gynecologist, were in at-tendance upon the baroness, Dr. Bar having been fetched from Paris in hot haste in one of King Leopoid's automobiles, adorned with his royal cipher. So great was the speed of the royal chauffeur in bringing the physician that he ran the motor right into a herd of cattle that was wandering home along the high road, seriously injuring the herdsman and almost wrecking the ma-chine. The birth of the boy was officially registered by the Mayor of the neighboring village Longpont as that of "Philip Henry Francis Delacroix, born at the Chateau de Larmoy on November 6, 1967; mother, Blanche Zella Josephine Dela croix, twenty-four years old, no profession; father not named." The birth was followed a few hours afterward by the christening (ondoiement), for which purpose the rector of Longpont, to whose parish the Chateau of Larmoy belongs, was summoned by the King.

> The presence of the priest on this and other oc casions at the chateau, as well as the fact that Leopold attends mass at the Church of Longpont every Sunday, occupying the special seats reserved for the proprietors of the Chateau of Lormoy, tends to confirm the persistent rumor according to which Leopold is privately married to Blanche Delacroix (Baroness Vaughan). The rector is a most worthy and justly respected old man, and it is difficult to believe that he would countenance the occupants of the chateau if the relations between them were of the chateau if the relations between them were unlawful, or that he would express himself so highly about the goodness and philanthropy of his royal parishioner. The King has been living at the Chateau of Lormoy for the last two months, much to the disgust of his ministers who in all the troublesome and stormy discussions in and out of Parliament about the Congo Free State have been in daily need of consulting him and who have not been able to do so otherwise than by letter or over the telephone. In fact, the absence of the King from Brussels during the crisis has been made the ubject of much criticism, the official excuse being given that Leopold is detained by the condition of his health at the French thermal resort of Royat, whence all his decrees during the last two months have been dated, although he has not been near

This is the second boy borne by th Vaughan to the King, and his birth naturally serves to revive the persistent stories according to which Leopold has arranged to bequeath not only his interests in the Congo Free State but even his sovereignty thereof to his eldest boy by the baroness. It must be borne in mind that there is nothing in the Belgian or French code which recognizes any Edgar Halstead has been added to the cast. "The the Belgian or French code which field the Belgian or French code which field marriages. If Leopold has married the baroness secretly she is his lawful wife and would in that Walte.

case be Queen of Belgium were it not for the Belgian statute which requires the sanction of the government to matrimonial alliances contracted by members of the royal family. The baroness is the daughter of parents of the name of Delacroix, who were concierges, or janitors, first at Liege and afterward in Paris. Her mother is dead. The father is an inmate of a lunatic asylum, and an uncle amed Lamgendolck is one of the Socialist members of the Belgian Parliament. The baroness's eldest sister is a respectable and prosperous fruit seller at Brussels and declines to hold any com munication with her.

PRINCE ARTHUR TO VISIT CANADA.

Prince Arthur, only son of the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by an imposing suite, will represent his uncle, King Edward, at the celebraion next year of the tercentennial anniversary of the founding of Quebec in 1803 by Samuel de Cham-plain, who bestowed upon it its present name. All the rumors to the effect that the King and Queen or the Prince and Princess of Wales would visit the Dominion next year are therefore set at rest. It was originally intended that the Duke of Connaught should represent the King, but his appointment as Lord High Commissioner of the British possessions in the Mediterranean and of Egypt and the Soudan and the possibility of a crisis on the banks of the Nile within the next year, render it impossible for him to cross the Atlantic. It is proposed that on the termination of the ceremonies at Quebec Prince Arthur should spend several weeks in an extended tour through Northwestern Canada, which is as yet terra incognita to the members of the reigning house.

Prince Arthur, though relatively young in years. s blessed with an abundance of tact, coupled with a pleasant, modest, unaffected manner, and thus far has succeeded in making friends for himself and for the royal family wherever he has been. either at home or abroad. In England he is particularly popular, by reason of the knowledge that he ed the German throne of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha order to remain an Englishman, preferring the position and life of a British prince of the blood o that of a Teuton sovereign. Moreover, his name has been invested with a certain amount of romance in consequence of the widespread belief that there are dynastic obstacles to his marriage with the very pretty girl, the daughter of a peer, with whor his name has been connected.

It is doubtful whether King Edward will again ever be seen on this side of the Atlantic. Any visit Canada would necessitate similar compliments o Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India and other dependencies, in order to avoid jealousy and ill feeling, added to which, Edward VII has arrived at a time of life when it is imortant not only for himself personally but likewise to the state that he should husband his strength and avoid unnecessary fatigue.

MRS. M'CREERY'S NEW ENGLISH HOME. Stonor Park, near Henley-on-the-Thames, which has just been leased by Mrs. Richard McCreery, of New York, in view of her approaching marriage to the Hon. Henry Coventry, third son of the Earl of Coventry, is one of the most beautiful places on the Thames, and belongs to Lord Camoys, chief of the ancient House of Stonor. The Stonors were connected with Oxfordshire long before the Norman Conquest. One of them commanded the left wing of the British army at the battle of Agincourt. In the reign of King Henry VIII the barony fell into abeyance through lack of direct descent, and in 1839 Queen Victoria terminated this abeyance by summoning Thomas Stonor to the House of Peers as Lord Camoys. The present lord's grandmother was the youngest daughter of the great Sir Robert Peel and one of the earliest ladies in waiting of Queen Alexandra, and his father's younger brother, Harry Stonor, remains to-day one of the most popular gentlemen in attendance upon the King and MARQUISE DE FONTENOY.

ONLY BRUISED BY DON JOSE'S DAGGER.

Mme. Bressler-Gianoli Almost Recovered from Effects of Lunge by Dalmores.

A dainty bandage hid part of the right hand of Mme. Bressler-Gianoli when she sang at the Sun-day night concert at the Manhattan Opera House yesterday. Madame's nerves seemed to have re-covered somewhat from the shock of the incident in the last scene of "Carmen" on Saturday night, when M. Dalmores as Don José drove his dagger against her hand, causing her to faint, instead of dying, as is customary.

Although it had been announced that she probably would not be able to appear for several days because her hand had been mutilated by the weapon which Don José used, her physician gave her permission to resume her engagement yesterher permission to resume her engagement yester-day. Oscar Hammerstein rushed into the office at the Opera House a half hour before the per-formance was scheduled. Then he said he had heard madame would not be able to sing. Messengers were hurrledly sent to her home at No. 223 West 38th street, and soon madame appeared and

The appearance of Mme. Gianoli was received with enthusiastic applause. Many congratulations that she had recovered so quickly and escaped blood poisoning, which was feared by those who doubted the quality of the silver tinsel used to brighten the reinforced papier maché daggers usually seen in such cases, were heaped upon her. When Mr. Hammerstein was asked about the daggers he said they were all blunted, and that the singer's hand had been bruised only, and not cut, as had at first been feared. Mme. Gianoli made light of her injury, and said she had no intention of bringing suit against Don José for the injury, which, she added, was pardonable under the circumstances. She rested all day and appeared in the best of spirits when she stepped before the audience.

MR. ROCKEFELLER'S NEW GARAGE.

John D. Reckefeller has just completed a private garage, said to be the finest of its kind in the country, in the eastern end of his large granite stable at Pocantico Hills. It is 100 feet square and has a cement floor and wash table. In the rear is a large workroom. On the second floor are three bedrooms for his chauffeurs, a bathroom and a reading room, which Mr. Rockefeller will keep supplied with the latest literature, and an excellent library.

Rockefeller is a keen automobilist, and now has three big machines, and expects to get another. The garage that he has just finished cost him $25,000. The walls are built of white tile, all the floors are of hard wood and chandeliers hang from the ceifing.
Mr. Rockefeller will stay at Pocantico Hills until the snow flies, when he will go to South Carolina, where he intends to spend the winter playing golf.

In 1876 he was the Republican candidate for the 45th Congress from the 6th District, and was defeated by fourteeh votes. He was elected to the 48th Congress and for three successive terms thereafter. In 1890 he again met defeat. In the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was the secretary of the Republican National Committee. Shortly after the elec-tion of that year President Harrison, who was his warm personal friend, appointed him to the Su-preme Court of the District of Columbia. He was elected United States Senator from Maryland in 1898 to succeed Arthur Pue Gorman, taking his March 4, 1899, and serving until 1906. In the latter year he was appointed to the justiceship which he held at the time of his death. In his judicial as well as his legislative career Justice McComas earned high praise.

Justice McComas was for several years professor of international law at the Georgetown University Law School. He was twice married, first to Leah M. Humrichouse. His second marriage took place last July at Atlantic City. The bride was Mrs. Hebe Harrison Muir, a Southern belle. Friends of the couple were told that the wedding would be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, in this city, on July 15, but when they called on that day to offer congratulations they found that the couple had been married at St. James's Episcopal Church, Atlantic City, by the Rev. EDWARD VICTOR LOEW.

Edward Victor Loew, lawyer, banker and former Controller of New York City, died from apoplexy at his home, No. 25 West 57th street, yes terday. He was born in New York City in 1839, the son of Frederick and Salome S. Loew. He was educated in the public schools, but was compelled to earn his own living at an early age because of the death of his father. After working several years in a real estate office ne formed a partnership with his brother, Charles.

Later he entered the office of Samuel P. Bell, a well known real estate lawyer. He was admitted to the oar in 1868, and soon became prominent as a real estate lawyer himself. Mr. Loew became interested in extensive building operations, and constructed more than three hundred buildings in New York. In 1867 he became one of the incorporators of the Eleventh Ward Bank, of which he was for many years a director. In 1869 he became an inc tor of the Eleventh Ward Savings Bank, in 1870 of the Manufacturers' and Builders' Fire Insurance Company, of which he was vice-president for twenty-three years, and in 1873 of the New York Real Estate Guaranty Company. He was a director of the Seaboard National Bank, the Knickerbocker Trust Company, the Standard Gas Light Company, the New York Mutual Savings and Loan Ass tion, the Iron Steamboat Company, and the Bato pilas Mining Company, and president of the Ameri can Savings Bank. SAINT-GAUDENS'S DEATH DEPLORED.

The council of the National Academy of Design,

The loss of the artist is thus one which his associates deeply deplore in common with a sorrowing nation; but the loss of the man, who in all his personal relations with his fellow artists was as modest and fraternal as his art was unusual and distinguished, is peculiarly our own, and its sorrow can only be lightened by the memory of the privilege of his presence and the pride of the association with the maker of his noble work.

with the new students. His fund of quaint stories, his songs and his sleight-of-hand performances invariably brought him a shower of small change.

He was eighty-four years old, and leaves a wife and a daughter. His full name, George Henry

Hannibal, was not known to one of a hundred Yale men, who greeted the eccentric old darky daily as
