Abdul Baha Talks to Kate Carew of Things Spiritual and Mundane

Leader of the Baha'is, Who Has Been Called the "Breeze of God," Reveals to Interviewer a Day's Processes in His Quiet Campaign for the Advancement of His Spiritual Philosophy.

The Baha'is are a unique religious group who believe in the oneness of God and the equality of all human beings. Founded by Baha'u'llah in the late 19th century, the Baha'i Faith has grown to be one of the fastest-growing religious movements in the world. The Baha'is believe in the oneness of humanity and the need for spiritual development to achieve this goal.

Abdul Baha, the son of Baha'u'llah, was instrumental in spreading the teachings of the Baha'i Faith. He traveled extensively, giving lectures and establishing Baha'i centers around the world. His message was one of peace, unity, and the need for spiritual growth.

In this article, Abdul Baha talks to Kate Carew, a reporter for the New York Tribune, about his vision for a world united under the power of the spirit. He discusses the need for spiritual development and the role of individuals in achieving this goal.

The interview provides insights into the beliefs and teachings of the Baha'i Faith, highlighting its emphasis on unity, oneness, and the importance of spiritual growth for the betterment of humanity.
