

BRITISH DENY TURKS SUNK
CRUISER IN MEDITERRANEAN

Report Probably Refers to Seaplane Carrier Ben-My-Chree, They Say
London, Jan. 13.—The statement in the official Turkish communication of January 11 that a British cruiser of the Juno type was sunk at Port Mey, or Kastellorizo, an island in the Mediterranean, off the Asia Minor mainland, is denied in an official communication given out today by the British Admiralty.

The statement says that no British cruiser has been sunk in these circumstances, and that presumably the vessel referred to is the seaplane carrier Ben-My-Chree, the sinking of which in the Kastellorizo harbor already has been announced by the Admiralty.

Forty Turkish Craft Sunk in Raid
London, Jan. 13.—A raid on the Anatolian coast by a Russian squadron is reported in a Central News dispatch from Petrograd. The Russians sank forty Turkish sailing vessels, which were carrying food to Constantinople.

Bethlehem Steel Ready to Duplicate Navy Yard's
Figures

PATRIOTIC MOTIVE
BEHIND THE MOVE

Corporation Desires Only to Serve Country, President Grace Says

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.—Speaking before the Terran Club here tonight on the complaint of the Navy Department that bids received for warships were too high, Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, said that his company had determined to make an offer to the government that if it would build two of the four authorized battle cruisers in navy yards the Bethlehem Steel Company would construct the other two at the ascertained cost of building the ships in the government yards.

"We will also contract to have our ships ready for service ahead of the government ships," he said.

Motives Patriotic
"It would be a real advantage to Bethlehem steel shipyards to be relieved of any obligation to enter upon this naval construction," Mr. Grace continued. "The profit from it cannot possibly amount to much and the responsibility is enormous. But we do feel a patriotic obligation in the matter, and we realize that it is our duty to do everything we can to make our plant and experience available for the use of the American government."

The policy of the Navy Department, Mr. Grace said, seemed to embody an effort to discourage private enterprise and to divert all work for national defense into government plants. Although the Bethlehem Steel Company had been able, since the European war began, to obtain in Europe the highest prices for its products, it had adhered to its charges to the United States government to the basis of prices established before the war.

Referring to a recent announcement that a British manufacturer had underbid American concerns for shells for the navy, Mr. Grace said it should be remembered that the British navy had seen but little action and that it was entirely conceivable that there was a surplus of naval shells which the British government might be willing to have its munition makers dump in the United States and turn the proceeds into shells for the battlefields.

Of the reasons for the price at which the Bethlehem company bid for shells, he said:

"Two years ago we took an order for 2,400 14-inch armor-piercing shells at a contract price of $765,000. These shells were to be delivered within a certain time or we had to pay a large penalty."

Tests Not Standardized
"The only specifications which the Navy Department gives for the guidance of manufacturers in making these shells is that they shall be of a certain size and that they must pierce armor plate at a certain velocity on impact. The quality of the armor plate is not standardized, and it is impossible for a manufacturer to foretell the exact conditions of the tests to which the shells will be subjected."

"We had made large quantities of shells in the past which had been accepted by the Navy Department. But in planning the particular order referred to for 14-inch shells the Navy Department altered the angle at which the tested shells must pierce armor plate. The proposition was new, but we were assured by officers of the department that the shells then being produced would meet the government's new tests. The result, however, has been absolute inability on our part or of any other manufacturer to produce in any quantity shells which will meet these novel tests. In fact, we know of no process of projectile making through which it is possible to produce in quantities shells which will conform to the Navy Department's requirements."

"The result is that up to now on that contract of $765,000 we have put into actual operating expense $447,881, and have been penalized for non-delivery $305,744, a total of $753,625, with no receipt whatever."

"Having been unable after incurring liabilities of more than $1,000,000 to deliver shells on previous orders, which would have no good purpose to be served by bidding at all on more 14-inch shells."

"The 16-inch shell, however, was something new, and we thought it possible that we might be able to meet the requirements."

"That is the whole story. We have not the slightest idea who made these shells. We do not know that there will be any profit. Indeed, there is no certainty that even if we receive the contract, it would be possible for us to deliver a shell that will stand the test. We cannot know what the nature of these tests will be."

"For officers of the Navy Department to assume that any bid made under such conditions is 'exorbitant' is, as we see it, utterly unfair."

"If, however, the Navy Department will make its tests within the known capacity of the projectile-making art, and if these tests shall be standardized, we will undertake to manufacture shells under conditions both as to price and as to time which will equal if not be better than those of any other manufacturer in the world."

Duma Leader Killed
Rasputin, Russians Hear

Purishkevitch, Alleged Slayer,
Accuses Sturmer and Protopopoff of Pro-German Schemes—Entente Diplomats Involved in Monk's Death.

The murder of the monk Rasputin, according to the well informed Moscow paper, "Russkoye Slovo," was the result of an elaborate political plot. The names of certain radical leaders and Allied diplomats are mentioned in connection with the event that caused the downfall of Premier Trepoff and the rise of the reactionary Golitsin.

Deputy Purishkevitch, whose speech at a recent session of the Duma produced a sensation in Europe, was the slayer of Rasputin, according to the "Russkoye Slovo."

Purishkevitch is one of the most interesting characters in Russian political life. Before the war he was a member of the Black Hundred, an organization responsible for all the pogroms that occurred in Russia in recent years. A reactionary of the deepest dye, he was notorious for his attacks against the Jews and the intellectuals. In the Duma he was the leader of the Extreme Right group.

Turns Against Government
But the war produced one of its most marvellous effects on Purishkevitch. The incompetence of the government sobered him, and from one of its most loyal supporters he turned, on December 8, 1916, into one of its bitterest opponents. On that day, immediately after Premier Trepoff's reassuring declaration in the Duma, Purishkevitch mounted the speaker's platform and made his now celebrated speech. Copies of it have just reached this country.

No better picture of the present state of affairs in Russia can be had than the one furnished by this speech. Purishkevitch said, in part:

"Our prospects for the future are rather cheerless, according to the Prime Minister's declaration. Perhaps one may be justified in supposing that the hour is coming when the governmental mechanism will work smoothly and when the Premier's hopes will be realized. But at the present moment one must face the gloomy, disheartening and depressing picture of Russian reality."

"With inexpressible spiritual agitation I mount this tribune today, not because I withdrew from the ranks of my party, for my political convictions are unchanged. I am still even now the most conservative of all occupying the right section. But, now, as before, I am incapable of becoming a frequenter of the ministerial waiting parlors."

Chaos Behind the Lines
"I see as clearly as most of you what and who is injuring Russia, postponing the hour of her indubitable victory over the enemy. All Russian thirsts for one thing—victory. And having such soldiers as we have we cannot be vanquished."

"But, suffering from the chaos now reigning in the ranks of the governmental authorities, with its consequent demoralization of the rear, we feel that the hour of victory is being postponed further and further. If not for this chaos, if the government had been organized, the hour of victory would have been near to-day."

"The government up to the present moment suffered, and is still suffering, from the disservice of the will. Perhaps in the future the governmental organs will begin to work, but in the recent past, in the course of the passing year, the life of the Cabinet resembled the legendary slumber of the twelve maids."

Plot for Separate Peace
"When there is much shouting to the effect that there will be no separate peace, it means that there is some one who labors that such a peace be concluded. Our Allies talk little of peace, for in their midst there are now so many decomposing currents as have penetrated into the organs of our government and undermined the will of its highest officer."

"The sacred words of our Emperor are memorable. So long as there remains a single German on Russian soil, there will be no peace. But one after the other the representatives of the government appear here to make denials. What and whose words do they come to deny?"

"We do not talk of peace. It means, then, that the denials are directed against the dark rumors and secret activities originating in certain circles engaged in bringing about a separate peace."

"There was a time when there was talk of the government's confidence in the people. There was a time when there was talk of cooperation between the public and the government. But now there is a question of the public's confidence in the government, and not the government's confidence in the people."

ple. The government's authority and patriotism are under suspicion.

German Party Active
"Let me say that there is ground for believing that the government is less patriotic than the people, and that it deserves not the confidence it seeks from us. We desire that in matters of national defence the government labor hand in hand with the public, that it be not less patriotic than the lowliest Russian worker producing shells and ammunition."

"Where was the government up to now? How did its activities manifest themselves otherwise than in the censor's red pencil, which deleted all that had no relation to national defence, but which might have been injurious to the reputation of some minister. We, the conservatives, consider it untimely and premature to seek reforms in a time of a national crisis. But we demand a guarantee for system in the government's administration and a definite programme in regard to the most vital problems."

"The disorganization of the rear is being created in our midst with the help of the German party, which works tirelessly and with astonishing persistence among us, and with the help of those fallen elements of our public who consider it right to serve the enemy."

Leaders' Aims Are Selfish
"The government, thanks to the absence of any system and programme, more than any other factor, helped to kill the patriotism of the people, to damp the public's enthusiasm and its impulses to labor for victory. At the present moment, when the leaders of the highest governmental organs collapse daily, even as soap bubbles, one does not know to whom to turn in expectation of the word of truth and justice. Each minister is now working for his own ends, on his own initiative."

"In this change of government leaders we, without regard to party affiliations, are amazed, not by the fact that there, higher up, a man is being sought for a responsible post, but that there are, in such trying times, men who, either knowing themselves very little or being passionately ambitious, accept the offered posts, knowing that they will lack ability to honestly fulfill their duties to the nation."

"The chief disease of Russian life is the absurd censoring of all that which ought not to be compared to the deception played by the authorities, the dangerous signs of the triumph of the Germanophile elements in the government circles, the fear of what tomorrow may bring us, and the governmental literature, freshly baked every day."

"There lie before me now two such circulars, both secret, which forbid the press to tell of possible Cabinet changes and of the possibility of the dismissal of Bobrinski, Minister of Agriculture, and Protopopoff, Minister of Interior. But one of these (Bobrinski) has already been retired, and let us hope that in the near future the other will be forced to leave his post, too."

Tautonic Influence Powerful
"While military campaigns are being planned at the imperial headquarters an incomprehensible campaign is being waged here for the German cause by a man in possession shows that there is some evil, powerful hand which directs it all. Archangel is the only port we have in which ammunition in large quantities arrives from abroad. And so an army of German war prisoners is sent to Archangel for some mysterious reason. As a result we get the explosion."

"Everything which tends to shed light on the real work of our allies is prohibited. Only the other day the governors of Tchernigov and Tver forbade the lectures of Kunst & Albera, one of the most powerful German spying organizations in our country, continuing to function. In the factories we are unable to make public certain facts in this connection from this platform, but I will communicate them to the War Minister."

Sturmer Suspected Allies
"In regard to the part played by the then Vice-President of the Duma and now Minister of the Interior, Protopopoff, in the establishment of a certain newspaper, I will say that the part played by him in the negotiations with the German diplomat at Stockholm is insignificant in comparison with his part in this new enterprise."

"But how will Protopopoff's newspaper serve the interests of a foreign power? Of course, it will be impossible to openly defend the interests of Germany in such a newspaper. But it is possible to talk to the public something like this: You are fighting to throw off the German yoke, but instead you will be subjected to the Franco-British yoke."

"Did not Premier Sturmer say to me that it is necessary somewhat to curtail the appetites of our allies, for they demand too much of us? I was astounded that at the time our Allies were doing their utmost to help us we were suspecting them of disloyalty and our Foreign Minister held it necessary to behave with moderation toward the demands of our allies."

"The root of all the evil springs from those dark forces which control the high offices, elevating to them men unfit for the task. Every day the most impossible reports are being circulated here among us, and it is finally necessary that the Duma, representing the entire country, shall raise its voice against the portentous evil decomposing our national life."

ALLIES TO FORCE
DECISION IN WEST

four years of fighting, impoverished and exhausted to the point where thousands have died because they could not digest their food, fell the burden of repulsing the Bulgarians' great massed attacks soon after they retook the field. From August on they forced the fight almost constantly, capturing Monastir and practically putting the Bulgars in rout. Only German reinforcements prevented the collapse of the Bulgars.

British Make Good in East
Few persons, even here, appreciate the fact that the British hold a line in Macedonia longer than their front in France. In the few opportunities at their command they have made the headway against an enemy outnumbering them.

In the second place, instead of helping the Germans in their Russian campaign, the Bulgars cried for assistance. This upset Mackensen's timetable, how seriously the spring offensives may show.

Before he undertook the Dobruja campaign Mackensen had to organize and train a Bulgarian reserve army. This took time. Eventually he is likely to find that these delays will prove costly and that his whole campaign may end abortively.

The Allies can thank Sarraill for the cloud in some quarters. The French chief has faced tremendous handicaps and obstacles and has overcome them. Close observers believe the Bulgars have had almost enough fighting and will not be so tough customers in 1917. When the weather permits there will be heavy fighting and possibly decisive battles. Sarraill has laid the ground work.
