ANTONIO MURO'S FESTIVAL.

A NEW HAVEN BARBER'S WAY OF RETURNING THANKS.

He Believes That He Was Cured of a Severe Attack of Pneumonia Through the Intercession of Our Lady of San Valentino, and Each Year He Celebrates the Event.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 24.—For 362 days of the year Antonio Muro plies his trade of a barber in his little Grand avenue shop—5 cents for a shave and 15 cents for a hair cut. The other three days of the year he is a very different sort of man and makes a considerable impression upon the city. The period of his annual glorification has again arrived; he has cast aside his razor and his latter brush, and is busy superintending the preliminaries of his great yearly celebration. Nearly all the houses of the Italian quarter are being decorated with the red, white and green of the fatherland; all the streets of the Fifth ward are being hung with incandescent lights, in whose globes the same colors alternate; the little Catholic church on Wooster street is being decorated with triumphal arches and flags of all nations; $500 has already been spent for fireworks for the illumination on the old Green, and the famous band of the city is nightly rehearsing the sacred hymns and popular airs which will be played. Three years ago the barber recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia, and this is the way he takes to celebrate that recovery.

It was not a natural cure, of course, according to the view he takes of it. One day he retired to the back of his barber shop, complaining to his wife of a severe pain in his chest. In a few days everything seemed to be up with poor Tony Muro. All the Italian doctors of the colony were summoned in turn, and each in turn gave a glance at the melancholy sick man and shook his head.

"You had better call a priest, Tony," they said; "we can't do anything for you."

Tony's wife went deep down into the family strong box in which the results of her husband's industry were preserved, and called in one of the chief medical lights of the town. But it was all in vain. The learned man declared that the disease had progressed too far; that the sick man was a hopeless case, and that the only thing to do was to wait for the arrival of the angel of death.

Muro was still a young man, and he had no wish to die. As he lay moaning in the little room back of his barber shop, however, he saw no other way out of his present misfortune. All the doctors had failed, and he felt that he must live forty-eight hours, and he felt very much as though they spoke the truth. The news of his extremity produced a profound impression in the colony. He was a good-natured and industrious fellow, had never been known to speak ill of his neighbors, was always regular in his attendance at mass and was universally popular. A popular and pious man, he was a great help to the community, and his prayers went up for that night for his recovery, and Tony, weak as he was, prayed himself.

It seemed as though, in a degree, these prayers were answered. For the first time in several days Antonio fell asleep; it was not a feverish sleep, but a good, healthful, refreshing unconsciousness. And as he slept, like John Bunyan, he dreamed a dream. He thought that he was lying in a bed of mother-of-pearl, between the whitest of sheets, and in a room adorned by thousands of sparkling gems. Somehow or other he seemed to be at home again at San Valentino, Italy, though in the relation of this marvelous Antonio does not say whether he was accustomed to sleep in his native land. It was altogether too dazzling for the poor man, and he instinctively shut his eyes against such splendid surroundings. He opened his eyes, and there was another surprise in store for him. He was standing at the foot of the bed, and he saw a woman at least ten feet high, was clad in a garment of many folds, while the other half of the woman was clad in a robe of many folds, and she was standing at the foot of the bed. The index finger of one hand was raised appealingly toward heaven, while the other hand was pointed downward toward the bed where Antonio lay. There was nothing terrible in the face of the visitor; it was benignant and radiant with hope.

Antonio recognized the apparition at a glance. He had seen her many times in his childhood at the church, his native land. "Our Lady of San Valentino!" he exclaimed.

The figure gently and apparently pleased to be so quickly recognized.

"All that I was afraid before to say now," said Tony, in telling the story afterward, "I try to make the cross, but I was too weak. But the lady, she did not mind. She began to speak in sweet tones. I never heard such a sweet voice. She told me all about my life; how I had been a good man; always go to mass, and many other things."

She informed him that she had kept a watchful eye upon him ever since the day he left the shores of Italy; that she had saved him from many a stroke of ill fortune, and that she long ago resolved that he should never come to harm. Naturally this last statement was a great piece of news to Tony. For the first time since the doctor gave him up as a lost job he began to hope.

"Then you cure me now from my sickness?" pleaded Antonio.

"I replied the Lady of San Valentino, 'I am the only one who can. But first you image of the Lady of San Valentino in fire. Toward midnight Muro will jump upon the bandstand and deliver an address in which he will relate once more the familiar story of his miraculous recovery and exhort all the townspeople to a day of fasting.

The next morning he will again return to the razor and the latter brush. He will work as industriously as ever for he has promised to extend one-half of his gross earnings in a similar celebration next year. If he should not know his ground, Antonio believes that he would be lost forthwith, and then even the intercession of the Lady of San Valentino would be in vain.

BEAT A COP WITH FLATIRON.

Policeman Mayland Seriously Hurt by Frank Bauman and a Comrade.

Mrs. Josephine Bauman of 228 Hamburg avenue, Williamsburg, complained to the police on Friday night that her 23-year-old son Frank, who lives at 210 Hiram street, was continually annoying her late at night. When Policeman Mayland of the Hamburg avenue station went out to duty at midnight he had instructions to keep a lookout for the man and drive him away. Mayland came across Bauman an hour later. Bauman was with Joseph Ulrich of 520 Hamburg avenue. Both were advised to leave the neighborhood. They went away, but he returned soon afterward and entered Mrs. Bauman's house. Her screams brought Mayland, and when he appeared Bauman attacked him with a flatiron, striking him on the head and finally rendering him insensible.

When Mayland was able to move he crawled to the street, where his rap on the sidewalk brought another policeman. The latter went to Bauman's room and found the door barred. He broke in and was also attacked by the man. Bauman and Ulrich were arrested by the men. Bauman and Ulrich were arrested by the men. Bauman and Ulrich were arrested by the men.

WILLIAM E. BREWSTER MISSING.

Remarkable Disappearance of a Young Brooklyn Man.

Mrs. J. W. Brewster of 201 President street, Brooklyn, has offered a reward for the discovery of her son, William E. Brewster, who has been missing since Aug. 31, and has also asked the police to assist in the search. On the day named the young man, while sitting in the parlor with his mother, suddenly jumped up and, putting on his hat and coat, remarked: "I am going out for a few minutes." He hurried out of the house and has not been seen since. He is about 20 years of age, is of medium height, has light brown hair, and is wearing a dark suit. His mother says that his disappearance is inexplicable to her, as he had no troubles or engagements of any kind and was happy in his business and family and social surroundings. He had very little money with him, she thinks, at the time of his departure from the house. The missing man is 27 years old, 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighed 140 pounds. His hair and mustache were brown and he was a well built man.

YALE DOORS OPEN TO-MORROW.

Changes Among Instructors at the Beginning of the 1898-99 College Year.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 24.—Yale's doors will swing open on Monday to receive the students after the long vacation, though the college term will not begin till next Thursday morning. No important changes have been made on the Yale campus. Not a new building is to be opened this year and not one of the old buildings has been torn down. The rumors that another of the structures of the old brick row would be demolished during the summer vacation proved unfounded. The work of transforming the College street church into a hall for lectures and for rooms for the music department has been completed. The fall steeples of the church has been removed among other changes.
