GOLF WITH ONE CLUB.

Choose a Driver or a Brassy, but Not a Niblick.

"There is a very ancient trick familiar to the sapient golfer," writes Horace Hutchinson in Town and Country. "It is a challenge to play with one club only that is to say, with only one to be used by the challenger, while the challenged is allowed the use, or abuse, of all his set. Of course this is an offer made only to a player whom the proposer of the match can give at least a half, when both have their full panoply of arms. On this ALSO GOT $2,000 A YEAR hypothesis the match ought to be a cerainty for the challenger.

"it seems so at least to the man of in nocence, cognizant only of his own help-lessness in the bunkers and hazardous places, even though armed with the niblick. which is the accredited means of extrication from all parlous situations, and feeling further how yet more at the mercy of the evil places he would be unless he had at hand the specially designed tools for his disinterment.

very sure of his victim, that he will leave to the latter the selection of the single club. Once in the foolish days of youth I challenged another thus: that he should play with his full set and I with one club only and gave him the further option of assign ing me the club that I should use. He was not without a certain intelligence, for he made choice that I should play with a putter in the morning round and a niblick in the

Th probably have done had he restricted me to the niblick for both rounds. The putter, pastur' on my strawberry patch out of nutter is but an abbreviated driver with a stiff shaft and the iron putter is no more than a slightly specialized form of club.

induce the niblick to propel the ball any decent distance—and it was a hard and solid 'gutty' ball that was the reluctant object of propulsion in those olden days-required hard labor, as well as high art. It required to half tip the ball, with the blade faced well over, and it was a very weary victor in that match that struggled across the last ditch. Had it been a matter of thirty-six holes with the niblick I doubt both whether he would have been victor and whether he would have reached the last

"One of the questions I am often asked is what single club should be selected in such circumstances as these An answer that one is tempted to give, and it is an answer which experience shows to be surprisingly near the right one, is that it does not matter a bit what club you do take. The whole affair, when put to the test, is one that bristles with surprises and with disillu-sionments. There are certain reserves and exceptions to be made. You certainly do want a club which will take you over the ground; for that is the first great essentialthat you should reach the green.

That is why the niblick which will be with such difficulty persuaded to send the ball for the work. But once arrived at the green there is no sort of club-or even no club, for an umbrella handle can be made to serve the purpose with which you cannot contrive the putting part of the opera-match of this kind with a putter only has found that the one part of the game at which he failed most sadly was the putter. He did indifferently well all through the green again and again by reaching the putting green in just the same number of strokes thinkin that if I strutted out in the patch which that achievement demanded of him with it on my shoulder it'd make the deer when he had a whole set of clubs with which to attempt it. "But once on the green he found his hand light shy o' that patch from then on on the tool that ought to be so kindly fa-miliar for all putting uses to have been juite spoiled for this friendly communication-apparently by the violent and brutal Then he looked up. He didn't turn skeert business to he which had put this club, which was designed for such very different things. If the answer is to be given in few words "I whipped around an' broke fer the was designed for such very different things. If the answer is to be given in few words it might be that the best club for the work is the club which will send the ball furthest. It has to be said again the great thing is the value of long driving a little practical work of this single club kind will quickly dispel it. Certainly it was so that we all found it in the days of the old solid gutty, a ball which required considerable persuasion to make it move. The club that we selected for business of the kind then was heerd a roar that made the hull o' that the driver, and it was the right selection. "It is not so certain that it would be the right club now, in days when balls are so nearly as far as the wooden clubs. During the modern rubber ball era it happened to me to enter for one of those single clul npetitions and the club I chose was a brassy. I was looked on rather as one regards a man who walks into church with his hat on. It seemed—though I acted in all innocence—that to choose a wooden club when limited to one only was among the things that are not done.

what seemed to make the offence no less rank was that I won. But I had not the least idea of committing an improper act. club for the work-for me, at least. "In spite of the success achieved, I am not sure that I was right. These rubber ored balls travel so far off the iron, the loss travel off the driving mashle or cleek and off the brassy respectively is so very little. the pearl or turquoise—as the case of approaching and putting with the iron weapon inclines the scale in its favor. A fact nearly derstood, the pearl will lose its tint and an and the turquoise will transfer that a man generally achieves. the pearl or turquoise—as the case ing and putting with the iron weapon in cellence of his putting with the driver when he selects that for his single club. The brassy is rather less easy to put with, but it makes the approaching more easy, and as for bunkers, it is better to keep out of them, but if you do not get in it is astonishing how it is possible to get out again even himself with, 'Squire, an' broke the game law addit'. he selects that for his single club. npromising a digging tool as a

Sweaters for China.

From Consular and Trade Reports. There is considerable Chinese demand for sweaters in all grades. Pure wootlen ones retail at Swatow for $1.20 to $1.40 gold. Ordinary sweaters are more in evi-dence than sweater coats and are of the light weight jersey style; preferred colors seem to be green, white and maroon.
Most of the retail shops buy altogether through Hongkong importers, as they cannot correspond in any language other than Chinese.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Aug. 31 .- "We run against some curious cases in investigating violations of the game law," said a game warden, "and the one I was called upon to see about one time up along the edge of Sullivan county deserves a place near the head of the list.
"I was informed that a well-known cities."

"I was informed that a well known citi zen of that rather wild stretch of country had killed a deer out of season, and I dropped down on him one day and hinted at my errand. He began to talk abou a strawberry patch he said he had and I told him that I hadn't anything to de with strawberry patches.

"I'm here to show you that you haven't got any right to kill deer out of season," I said.
