GED. FRANCIS TRAIN AT THE ACADEMY.

Train, Clay, and an Excited Audience on the Nigger Question - A Lively

Academy of Music to hear Mr. George Francis Train pro. nounce himself in regard to "England's Rottenness, Ire and's Oppression," and several other subjects.

Mr. Train was introduced by Mr. Cassius M. Clay, who poke of him as one whom he had found in England ading up manfully for America and her government. Mr. TRAIN was welcomed warmly, and proceeded to say the applause he had received he would pass over to the credit of the navy, which, speaking through the guns of the Monitor, warned England to keep her hands off, and to the credit of the army and its chief, McClelian. (Cheers for McClellan.) He denounced England as unworthy of their respect, and challenged any Englishman who might be among the audience to come up and try to refute any-Thing he might say—not to sneer, but be a man and come on the stage and discuss it with him. He spoke of the postn which he had taken in England in that great debating ty, where he had met the literary men of the country, said that he had assumed a magnificent idea of his abilities. And now he came here, and his desire was to take some of the great men of this country out of the dress circles and put them in the pit, where they bethe dress circles and put them in the pit, where they belonged. No man, he believed, could assume a position which a had not the power to maintain, and, therefore, it was uttern possible for him to stand before an audience if he had not the interest to back up anything he might say. He went on to denounce the Rollas bankers, and averaged himself delighted with the high rate of exexpressed bimself delighted with the high rate of ex-change, as it doubled the Morrill tariff, and kept the profits on this side. The only way to reach an Englishman was through his stomach and through his pocket. He gave a indicrous skotch of the manners or the Englishman imitating with great effect the style of English afterdinner speeches, which brought down roars of laughter. His declared that he had made the discovery that England was rosten in her new, rosten in her arm, rosten in rosten in the new, rosten in her arm, rosten in rosten in the new, rosten in her arm, rosten in rosten in the new, rosten in her arm, rosten in rosten in the new, rosten in her arm, rosten in rosten in the rost of the chart of the part of the rosten of the rosten

A Voiss—How is James Gordon Bennett better than too thers?

Mr. Train—I will tell you, sir. He has been true to New York and to America sil through. He goes for white peole, and not for black people. (Cheers.) Mr. Train thought, however, that John van Buren and Saymour and the others of that; arriy were all wrong in not ondorsing the President right square through. (Cheers.) The President's proclamation bast drowned the firs of the abolitionists. Now, said he, all in favor of the President manifest it by saying "Aye"—(a pietty general response of "Aye"). All who are opposit say "No."—(soveral "Noos" dropping from all parts of the house.)

Then Mr. Train switched off into the track of the dovernors at Altoona, and there were shouts of "Arrest the traitors."

a single instance (meaning the superiority of a black to white man).

Mr. CLAY—Ob, I am used to this thing all my life.

A Vorra—To bell with all these damned sbuittoniats.

Mr. CLAY—Availing himself of one of Mr. Prain's ideas—Ail in favor of hearing me, say "aye." (& me ayes. He discreedly refrained from putting the negative side of the question, and proceeded.) Well, now. Mr. Train, I will tell you why I have said that some of the black race are superior to many of the white race—(several voices, "It's a lie")—it is because of the oppression which has lasted over snoe the existence of this government to the present day—the oppression by the slaveholder—whose right you here vindicate over the non-slaveholding musases whose rights I stand here to-night to defend Why did I ill berate my slaves? Not especially that I love the black, for that the black has more claims upon my protection than any other person. But I was educated in a New England State—in the gentleman's own State—and there I found that every man, woman and child was educated and had a fair field for exertion, unlike the state of things in the slave States.

A VOICE—Oh, go back to Russia.

Mr. CLAY—I said in my own State, "We will educate these white masses, and not keep them down." (Renewed disorder and clamor.) It was not because I was for the black man that I advocated this or that pelicy. It was because I wished to do justice to all men—(some applause and more bitsea)—bocause I wished to elevate all men—bocause I wished myself to be free, and knew very well that however disorder and clamor, prejudion and party oreanizations may attempt to cover up the great truth, God Aimighty has not given if to me to be free also. ("Bravo" from some and hisses from more of the audience, limitation of the prejudice afains, the propose them, in the propose of the country.

Mr. Tank—Out West.

Mr. Clay—wherever you carry a set of men, operated op such a principle as that I tell you God Almighty will five prosper them, (Hisses). And I tell frishmen, here and else

A Voice—Why not buy the negroes instead of taking them?

Mr. Clay—I have not got the money. If I had I would do it with groat pleasure. Now, as to the moral question. So long as four millions of human beings, some of them as white as Mr. Train here (laying his hand on that gentleman's shoulder), with a good doal straighter har—(laughter)—can be held in slavery, how can a laboring man be respected? How can be be respected when a man as white as Mr. Train can be stripped naked and have thirty-nine lashes laid on his back if he does not do his work well? I tell you there is no democracy in slavery. (Cheers and hisses.) If you want to make labor respectable, make it free and God will prosper it.

Intis sentiment was received, like all the rest, with hisses and grans. Then Mr. Train came forward smilingly, and with the air of being able to do up the job handsomely and in quick time.

Mr. CLAY (advancing with watch in hand and appealing to the audience)—How many minutes will we give my friend?

Captain RYNDERS—He will go on just as long as he wants.

captain RYNDERS—He will go on just as long as he wants.

Mr. TRAIN—(three cheers for Train, "Hurra")—I want to show you how I will take these doctrines of Cassius M. Clay to pieces. He brought up an illustration of the Irish. Are there any Edmund Burkes, Shields, Grattans or Currans among the negroes? ("No, no, no,") is there a Wellington among them? ("No, no,") is there a Wellington among them? ("No, no.") is there a Corcorn, a Meagher, or Shields smong them?

A Voice—Or an O'Gorman?

Mr. Train then declared that in regard to the ratting system it was introduced by the abolitionists and Know Nothings. (Cries of "James Brooks.") There were no pauper houses or prisons among the slaves.

A Voice—Open the slave trade.

A North—Open the slave trade.

Mr. Train vice take care of themselves, and he looked upon it as a crime before God to liborate those creatures. (General applayse, participated in even by some latter to were present.) He appealed to his audience to help in carrying New York for the white people, and then the war would be at an oud, and all the States would be back into the Union.

The meeting separated with cheers for the army and groans for Clay and the abolitionists. A challenge for a free discussion on the Slavery question was given and accepted between Mr. Train and Mr. Clay for this evening, and the Cooper Institute was fixed as the arena.

With a larger command and a broader field, it is boped that he will still pursue his active policy, and push the robels under Bragg far down towards the Gulf before the new year sets in. around Corintb. It is not likely that his command will last long, as he is too young and too untried for so re-sponsible a position. It is thought that General McPherson, lately raised to the rank of major general, will be appointed to fill the position made vacant by Rosecrans' departure. General McPherson is a young efflor, but has seen considerable service. He was with Grant at Belmont, Donelson and Shiroh, and led the pursuit from Corinth, after the late repulse of Van Dorn's army. Though he has not been especially prominent in any engagement, he is thought, by those who best know him, to be well qualified for an important command. Too much caution cannot be shown in the selection of commandets for the error in West Tennessee. This department is essent. son, lately raised to the rank of major general, will be

On his arrival from California a year ago, he went at once into the field, and has not separated himself from his command upto the last few days. He was engaged in all the battles before Richmond, also in Maryland, and very much distinguished himself. We are glad our New Yorkers give such a good account of themselves.
