General Gibson Dead.

General William Harvey Gibson, the silver-tongued orator, died at his home on ument Square in the city of Tiffin, at 6 o'clock in the evening of November 22, 1894. He was a brave soldier, an able statesman, a peerless orator, and although an ardent Republican, a man of the people and for the what the country is in need of.

THE hearing of Judge Augustus L. Ricks, of the U.S. District Court, on the charge preferred against him by the Central Labor Union, of Cleveland, was begun Monday in that city. The allegations briefly summarized, charge him with having defrauded the Federal Government out of $1,558.75, monies received by him while Clerk of said Court, which he converted to his own use and failed to account for. Other charges were preferred Monday, by which the alleged shortage was increased to over $6,000. The Judge denies all of the allegations and in his answer explains from his standpoint all of the apparent errors in his accounts with the government. He is represented by Judge Stephenson Burke, Judge W. B. Sanders, Andrew Squire and Virgil P. Kline, Arnold Green, Esq., is counsel for the Union. Let justice be done and no one will have any right to complain.

W. L. DOUGLAS, of Brocton, Mass., the world-famed manufacturer of the Douglas $3.00 Shoe, has again evidenced his regard for his employes by providing for their free medical attendance and treatment. He says he recognizes the fact that doctor's bills are a hardship to the average laborer, and the furnishing of free medicall treatment to each employe not only relieves him of that much of the burden, but will enable him to consult a physician whenever he is in need of doing so-something impossible to very many laboring people under present ons. Mr. Douglas also believes in and practices arbitration for all industrial differences between himself and employes. By the terms of the contract entered into between them, all such differences are submitted to the Massachusetts State Board of Arbitration, its decision to be final. Mr. Douglas is entitled to honorable mention for toward the sentimental and spectacular rather than in the direction of sound statesmanship, yet among the older and more thoughtful Republicans he is justly regarded as one and it will not be surprising should the presand when he speaks not only they but political economists of all parties listen. There stamping out the lawlessness. is not today a Republican statesman to be compared with "Honest John," in point of real ability, erroneous as are some of his theories; and naturally enough the recognition of his merits comes very largely from the maturer and consequently more conserv ative of his party constituents and members. If there is one thing that Republicans laud Mr. Sherman for more than others it is his freedom from idle verbiage and political extremes, and when he talks he alwas has, they say, something sound, safe and practical to offer. It is therefore with peculiar pleasure that we present to that portion of our Republican readers the following sound, safe and practical utterances ot Mr. Sherman on the late elections, and respecting the bearing of the election on the silver ques-

"The landslide that has given the Republicans control of the House by an overwhelming majority and perhaps the Senate by a small majority, is so widespread that I believe the cause is widespread. It has recovered to me to be a project against the age. power and a return to the Republicans.

However, I am not inclined to claim that the victory will be permanont. The people may become as displeased with the Republicans before many years and administer to them as crushing a defeat as they have administered to the Democrats this year. I would certainly not attempt to forecast what is to come of this revolution.

The people punished the Republicans in 1890 and 1892, and now they have changed. To say they cannot or are not likely to turn beach and in the people of the people back again is to make a stronger statement

I do not regard the present result as an in-dorsement of the McKinley billor a demand on the part of the people for radical tariff legislation. There will undoubtedly be some members who will regard it as such, but I hardly believe the party will enter into any extreme legislation of this kind. Of course they cannot do it during the next session of Congress, because the President would not allow anything of that nature to become a law, and the effort would prove fruitless. I would not favor any great increase of On the stump in the campaign I said duties. On the stump in the campaign I said very plainly that I was a moderate protectionist, and wanted only such duties as would insure a fair rate of wages for the workingmen of the country.

Some protectionists would have foreign goods absolutely excluded by a high tariff. I do not believe in this, as it would give a monopoly to our home manufacturers and bring on contests between capital and labor. I believe in so placing the duties as to allow a healthy foreign competition. If I should see that any duty was making a monopoly I would take that duty off.

The Republicans went to an extreme on the question in 1890 because they had absolute control of all branches of the Government. If there had been any check they would not have done so. In the same way the Democrats went to an extreme in this Congress.

There will probably be an effort to pass There will probably be an effort to pass the smaller tariff bills at the short session, but that would raise great opposition, and I believe will be futile. That will probably be the last of the tariff agitation for a time.

But one of the most interesting things to which I look forward is the friction that is bound to come between Mr. Cleveland and his party in Congress for the balance of his term. There has been internal discord in the party, and I can say truthfully that never in my Congressional experience have I seen in my Congressional experience have I seen such differences between the two Houses of such differences between the two flowes or Congress as when the Democrats have been in control of both. They seem to get along better with us than they do among themselves. The ill-feeling created by this will undoubtedly by shown constantly during the rest of the term of this administration.

I do not know exactly what to think of the result of this election as it bears on the silver result of this election as it bears on the silver question. I believe the silver sentiment has grown much stronger in the West and South but in the East generally, and in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois in particular, it is much weaker than it was either in 1890 and 1892. What bearing this may have on the 1892. What bearing this may have on the campaign for President in 1896 I could not

Mr. Peck then turned over all his 1879, and at present a membership of 124, available personalty to his milk patrons, who were thus made preferred creditors. It is understood that his son, Harry Peck, has purchased the store and will continue the business. The news of his misfortune will be learned with regret by the many friends of Mr. Peck throughout the county.
