GOLD STUMBLER UPON

LIKE A PIRATE'S TREASURE

John Hatfield Frequently Went to Sea and Returned Richer Every Time.

New York Sun Special Service

New York, May 31.—In a safe place on the premises of Melville E. Wygant, of Port Richmond, Staten Island, is a great pile of gold coins. There are American double eagles, English sovereigns, Spanish doubloons and many smaller coins in a glittering heap, enough of them to fill a half-bushel measure. According to the best belief of the historians of the neighborhood the money was buried by John D. Hatfield, who died in 1856. As to the source of the wealth of John Hatfield there is a lack of information. They say that he went away on distant journeys from time to time in the first half of this century and came back to richer each time by a great store of bullion and jewelry. That, at least, is the tradition.

The Hatfield homestead was sold under foreclosure a year ago and was bought by Charles Rosenfeld, who arranged to have the place put up into building lots. He sold the whole house to Mr. Darcey on condition that it should be removed by sundown to-day. Mr. Rosenfeld had heard the yarn about the hoards of money that the Hatfields of old were said to have hidden and was cautious enough to insert in his agreement with Mr. Darcey a provision that Mr. Darcey was authorized to remove nothing except building materials. Mr. Darcey stripped the outside of the building and then looked for a sub-contractor. He found "Mel" Wygant, who agreed to remove the rest of the building for $10. Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Wygant, with John T. Redmond, went to the wreck of the old house, accompanied by some workmen. They pulled down the big, old-fashioned chimney, and the discovery of the gold followed. A lawyer said: "Even if the Hatfield heirs or Mr. Rosenfeld succeeded in establishing a valid claim to the gold, Mr. Wygant need give up so much as he chooses. None of the claimants will be in a position to state that the money was found. But, judging by the varying accounts of its quantity, there is from $20,000 to $50,000 in the pile."

MCKINLEY CHANGES

Said to Have Declined Himself No Longer a Protectionist.

Philadelphia, May 31.—Speaking at a luncheon tendered in his honor, Mr. Jules Seligried, the French statesman visiting this country, said President McKinley told him in a recent interview that he was no longer an ultra protectionist. The United States had reached that period in its history when it became necessary to go out in the world and secure markets and when the necessity for heavy protection had disappeared.

WEST POINT PRANKS

One of Twenty-one Years Ago Is Recalled.

A MOST TERRIFIC EXPLOSION

Reminiscence Showing the Long Standing Nature of Mischief-Making at the Point.

From The Journal Bureau, Room 45, Post Building, Minneapolis.

Washington, May 31.—What military officers must condemn in the recent escape at West Point which has cost several cadets so dear, is its near approach to technical murder. They reason that, from posting the reveller in front of the commandant's quarters with the muzzle aimed straight at his door, to loading and firing it in that direction, would have been but a short step, just as imitating a signature for amusement now and then heads a person toward forgery.

The guns at the Point, however, have always played a conspicuous part in the outlaw revelries of the cadets. One instance is well remembered by officers who have not yet grown gray, and has been recalled by the events of the last few weeks. It was in 1880, Colonel H. M. Lazelle was then commandant of cadets, and Captain Edward J. McClernand one of the tactical officers. Those were the days of a strict discipline, before baseball and football, and other undignified but healthful sports had received the sanction of the authorities and given the youngsters a more sane and useful outlet for their surplus energy. Both the officers mentioned were pretty keen disciplinarians, and, as a consequence, not overhauling with popularity in the student circle. Word was passed around the academy by that freemasonry which eludes all pursuit that the last night of the year was to be celebrated by a somewhat noisy demonstration of the cadets' affection for McClernand, and getting wind of it, had asked specially to be made officer in charge for that night. After bedtime he made repeated visits to the barracks, but not a sound was audible anywhere. The cadets seemed to be sleeping the sleep of the just, and every light was out.

Dreadful Explosion.

The chapel clock was striking the midnight hour when a tremendous roar shook the house at the post. The post commandant, the tactical officers and others rushed out of their quarters, fearing that the magazine had been blown up. Investigation showed that the noise came from the field battery guns, all of which had been discharged. The mountains were still faintly echoing the roar when it was followed by a cannonade at Trophy Point. Several captured Mexican guns were kept firing.

McClernand had meanwhile hastened to the barracks and tried a door, but found it locked. He tried a second and a third with the same result, and then dispatched an orderly for an ax. Before it could be brought another explosion sounded from the roof of the barracks. This latter proved to be one of the 600-pound Mexican brass guns, which the young mischief-makers had dragged, early in the evening, from Trophy Point, three-eighths of a mile distant, and then upstairs to the roof. The explosions were timed in such order that the gun on the roof should not be discharged till the cadets who had fired the field battery had had a chance to get back to quarters.

Resolved to bring the boys to terms, and that quickly, McClernand organized the other tactical officers into an assaulting party, but as they approached the barracks, windows were suddenly opened and hands thrust out, each holding a lighted Roman candle, from which balls of fire shot directly at the officers, and, of course, caused their retreat. Two or three times the assaulting party charged, only to face the Roman candle fire again and be turned back, and in all this time not a cadet showed his face or any part of his person which would serve to identify him.

At a safe distance McClernand called for the cadet officers on duty, but no one responded. The assaulting party then broke into separate groups, one of them smashing a door in, and a systematic examination of the building was made. In a small room were found the cadet officers bound, gagged and locked in. All they could say for themselves was that each had been captured separately by two or three men in civilian's dress. A search of the rest of the building showed every cadet in bed and every room in perfect order.

How It Was Done.

The question, how the young fellows had contrived to do all this without detection was the subject of a long and exhaustive investigation. It then came out that, as already stated, the Mexican gun on the roof had been taken thither by hand. What an effort this cost may be judged by the fact that it took a company of engineers two days to restore the piece to its place. The powder was obtained by the practice of economy. For six weeks the cadets had been slyly extracting powder from their exercise cartridges and secreting it where it could be gathered up in bulk when necessary. As the outside explosions were at considerable distances apart, the group told off for the first had a hard time getting back to their barracks. The distance to be covered was about half mile, the snow was more than a foot deep, and sentries and strolling officers had to be avoided. The boys having rooms on the second and third floors climbed up dangling ropes, hand over hand, and got in at the windows. One cadet on the firing squads lost his way and fell behind. On getting into barracks, the leader discovered his absence; but it was observed from a window that the missing boy had come within sight of the building and was hiding in the shadow of a tree. The leader ran down stairs, unbarred the door nearest the hiding cadet and whistled. The cadet made a run for it, his companions sending off a second volley of Roman candles to distract the attention of the besiegers. A few of the latter caught sight of the lad as he was darting through the door and started after him, only to have the door slammed in their faces and to hear the bars within slide into place.

In this instance the investigators concluded that the entire cadet corps was involved in the scrape, and that to punish a few of them for the sins of all would appear invidious. The matter was therefore dropped. This was, perhaps, the most serious cadet revolt in the history of the academy.

Kind of Hose to Avoid.

Don't wear pearl-gray silk hose, is the latest tip from the consular bureau of the state department. Consul Hughes of Coburg, writes that the bad effects of wearing pearl-gray silk hose, colored by repeated baths in a solution of zinc chloride, has been demonstrated by Dr. Adolph Jolles before the Vienna Medical society. Dr. Jolles said the cadet corps showed conclusively that as much as 25 per cent of the zinc coloring matter was still on the hosiery when it was packed for market, and that the danger from absorbing this poison through the pores of the skin was very great.

MILITARY BRILLIANCE

Lord Roberts Conducting a Very Attractive Show.

London, May 31.—The military tournament just opened by Lord Roberts before an immense assemblage had special equestrian features. Detachments from all the forces represented at the inauguration of the Australian commonwealth are taking part in the tournament. An Indian frontier village is the scene of stirring maneuvers, with a final charge of horse artillery across a pontoon bridge and a vigorous onslaught upon the rebels. It is a brilliant show with 12 pounder guns drawn by blue jackets, cavalry waiting and dancing quadrilles and the best military band massed.

TRIAL OF HERRON

Ex-Parte Church Council to Sit Next Week.

IT MAY BE A QUIET AFFAIR

Tangible Evidence Not so Plentiful—Herron Expected to Write a Letter.

Special to The Journal.

Grinnell, Iowa, May 31.—The committee in charge of the Herron church trial, which is to be held here June 4, has about completed its arrangements. All the preliminary plans are being conducted secretly. However, enough has leaked out to show that there is some difference of opinion as to how the trial should be conducted. While there is a wealth of general information in the minds of church people in regard to Herron, there is a paucity of tangible evidence. The divorce proceedings at Algona were in the hands of two of the most skillful lawyers in the country and only the barest possibly bits of evidence were permitted to appear on the record. A private secretary of Professor Herron was the only witness who gave testimony supporting Mrs. Herron's plea of cruelty and inhuman treatment, and it is understood he has refused to talk, either to the papers or to the committee in charge of the trial.

The offer made by Professor Herron to write a letter to the council explaining his views on marriage and divorce, though making no defense of his private life, is believed to be a source of annoyance to the church people. What they want to do is to have Herron wholly on account of his private life and they are unwilling that the impression should go before the public that he is being put on account of his social or religious opinions. The question has arisen as to how this phase of the question should be answered. Whether to give it that position and to place it on the records of the proceedings of the trial, which will go before the public, whether to give it only some slight attention or whether to ignore it altogether. There is some opinion among the Congregationalists in Grinnell outside of the committee, is that while the letter which will probably be an open one, should be received, it should not be deflected from its course by this diversion. "The charge to be brought against Herron is that of conduct unbecoming a Christian and a gentleman," said a prominent member of the church, "and for the council to be diverted by the expression of Professor Herron's views on marriage and divorce is as if a man being tried for stealing should be allowed to extenuate his crime by his views on the law of property."

The committee empowered by the Grinnell church to act in this matter is made up of J. P. Lyman, Professor C. P. Childs, Professor Charles Noble, Dr. P. E. Somers and Rev. E. M. Vittum. These are representative men and may be relied upon in every respect to give Dr. Herron the fairest possible show.

This committee has called the council which will meet here next week and the matter will be brought before the church to that of the council. This council is ex-parte. That is, it has been made up without the concurrence of Professor Herron. He was invited to take part in its formation, but courteously declined, saying he was perfectly willing that it should be ex-parte.

The indications seem to be that the trial will be a quiet one, and that if the church people can have their way about it Herron will be quietly dropped without any more advertising than is absolutely necessary. This will probably not coincide with Herron's point of view, who by means of his letter, either open or otherwise, will probably seek to divert public attention from his private life to his public teaching, and in this way to lead several Congregationalists in Grinnell to believe.

$4,150 FOR A FOOT

$20,000 Suit Against the Great Northern Settled.

Special to The Journal.

Fargo, N. D., May 31.—Some months ago John Sharpe, of Fargo, was working as a brakeman on the Great Northern between Grand Forks and Duluth. While attempting to make repairs under a car, under orders, the train was started and he lost a foot. He instituted a suit for $20,000 and a settlement has just been effected for $4,150. He is a young man and will use a portion of the money in educating himself for some profession. Sharpe Wirtensohn of Minneapolis will have his woman bicyclists here again next week during the fair festival. A portable track will be built, and a tent and there will be an hour's racing each afternoon and another in the evening. Dottie Farnsworth, who was defeated here last month by Hans Hoff, is after a return race. From three days' racing during the firemen's tournament and street fair.

The program for the North Dakota Agricultural College commencement exercises is out. The preparatory department will have exercises Saturday night, June 8, the baccalaureate address Sunday, June 9, and the commencement exercises Monday, June 10. Monday will be devoted to Sophomore exercises, Tuesday to the Juniors and the graduation exercises will be held Wednesday. Rev. Marion Shuter of Minneapolis will deliver an address Wednesday evening.

YOUNG BUT TOUGH

Boy Tramp Steals a Horse and Makes Good His Escape.

Special to The Journal.

Armour, S. D., May 31.—While the family of John Bobeldy, living in the country near here was absent from home, a 15-year-old boy, named Bobeldy, who has been working as a farm hand in the neighborhood, entered the house and stole a small amount of money and a suit of clothes. He then rode away on a horse, a valuable horse and saddle and disappeared. Officers have so far been unable to find the boy or the stolen property.

Reports of an affair in which a white man was nearly beaten to death by three Indians came from the reservation south of here. The Indians were drunk and requested the white man to secure them more liquor and upon his refusal proceeded to beat him in a terrible manner.

The new school board has selected the teachers for the ensuing year except assistant principal on which they are deadlocked. The board is composed of six members and three of them have voted steadily for Mrs. Charles T. Kite, the former principal, while the other three have voted for half a dozen candidates in turn.

OFF FOR EUROPE

Company of Sixty Start From Upper Michigan Points.

Special to The Journal.

St. Louis, May 31.—A party of forty Calumet people left this week for Europe. About fifteen Hancock and Houghton people joined the party at those points, swelling the number to nearly sixty. The tourists will have their special sleeper, which will be taken directly to the docks at Boston, where an ocean liner will be in waiting. Most of the party will visit Cornwall in England, while a few will go to Finland and sections of Norway and Sweden.

The Laurium council appointed Engineer Farrington, formerly of the Houghton County Street Railway company, as superintendent of public works. Steps toward the formation of a Gentlemen's Driving association in Calumet are being taken. W. H. Thibault was selected president; Paul P. Roelun, vice president; Fred Eaton, secretary, and W. S. Whisler, treasurer. The purchase of property on which a race track will be constructed is under consideration.

NORTH DAKOTA POLITICS

Senator Hansbrough, Congressman Marshall and ex-Congressman Spaulding are three North Dakota statesmen whose political fortunes will be at stake during the next two years.

Hansbrough announces that he will spend most of the summer in North Dakota. He and his friends will continue the work of constructing new political fences. "Up to date no rival to Hansbrough has come into the open. In all probability none will until the contest of the next senatorial election is counted a possibility. Senator Little of Bismarck who is counted a friend of Hansbrough, has been mentioned." L. B. Hanson of Cass county, one of the men in the contest of four years ago, may enter later. In the meantime Senator Hansbrough's henchmen are quietly at work in the hope of making the thing as unanimous as at his election.

Congressman Marshall's nomination was an unforeseen circumstance of the last republican convention, but it elevated to a commanding position in the politics of the state a man who is a thorough organizer and who has a faculty of taking care not only of his own interests but of those of his friends. Before the issues of the next senatorial fight can be defined and the candidates determined, the state convention must be held and the nominees for congress named. The people and his friends will be denouncing Spaulding. By the time Marshall has served two years he will be just as popular. Marshall and Spaulding both come from the southern part of the state. There is some opinion that the list of senatorial probabilities will lack those
