AWAKING

Chapter IX.
The fool's outcry startied me less than Madame de Ferrier. She fell against me and sank downward, so that I was obliged to hold her arms up in my arms. I had never seen a woman swoon. I thought she was dying, and shouted to them below to come and help me.

The potter sat sprawling on the ground, and did not bestir himself to do anything. As soon as my hands and mind were free I took him by the scruff of the neck and kicked him behind with a good will. My rage at him for disregarding her state was the savage rage of an Iroquois. The other man laughed until the woods rang. Mad-ame de Ferrier sat up in what seemed to me a miraculous manner. We bathed her temples with brandy, and put her on a cushion of leaves raked up and dried to make a seat by the fire. The other man, who helped me carry her to the ra-vine, stood with his hat off, as was her She thanked him and thanked me. half shrouding her face with her hood, abashed at finding herself lost among strangers in the night; which was my I told him I had been a bad guide for a lady who had missed her way; and he said we were fortunate to reach a camp instead of stumbling into some danger. He was much older than I, at least 14 years, I learned afterwards, but it was like meeting Skenedonk again, or some friend from whom I had only been

The heartening warmth of the fire made steam go up from our clothes; and see-ing Madame de Ferrier alive once more, and the potter the other side of his wheel taking stock of his hurt, I felt happy.
We could hear in the cabin behind us a whining like that uttered by a fretful

My rage at the potter ending in good nature, I moved to make some amends for my haste; but he backed off.
"You startled us," said the other man,
"standing up in the clouds like ghosts.
"Standing up in the clouds like ghosts."

Chaumont is not of us. He is of the new nobility. His chateau near Blois was bought by his grandfather, and he takes

And your resemblance to one who has been dead many years is very striking, monsieur."

I said I was sorry if I had kicked the potter without warrant, but it seemed to me a base act to hesitate when help was asked for a woman.

"You are not fat, Lazarre," said Philippe, "your forehead is wide rather than receding, and you have not a double chin. Otherwise you are the image of one-Who are you?"

"I don't know."

"Don't know who you are?"

We heard all that you and the potter were saying down here, and I won dered how many boys there are in America that are provided for through an agent in New York, without knowing their parents. Now, that is my case."

"There!" Bellenger said, straightening up in his place like a bear rising from all fours. "That is the boy your De Ferriers saw in London."

"Yes; among the Iroquois." "Who placed you there?"

"No one could tell me except my Inian father; and he would not tell."
"Do you remember nothing of your childhood?

"Nothing.

"Did you ever see Bellinger before?" "I never saw him before to-night."
"But I saw him." said Madame de Fer rier. "in London, when I was about seven years old. It made a stronger impression on me than anything else that ever happened in my life except-" She stopped; brothers to the guillotine.'

The man who told me to call him Louis Philippe turned toward her, with attention as careful as his avoidance when she wished to be unobserved. She rose, and came around the fire, making a deep courtesy.

"My family may not be unknown to his Duke of Orleans. We royal highness the Duke of Orleans. We are De Ferriers of Mont-Louis; emigres now, like many others."

"Madame, I knew your family well. They were loyal to their king.' "My father died here in America. Before we sailed we saw this man in Lon-

"And with him-"

"Do you remember the boy well?"

"I remember him perfectly."
The wailing in the cabin became louder and turned to insistent animal howls. Instead of a babe the imprisoned creature was evidently a dog. I wondered that the potter did not let him out to warm his hide at the fire.

"Did you ever see the boy again?" "I did not see him again until he was brought to Count de Chaumont's house

"Why to De Chaumont? Le Ray de Chaumont is not of us. He is of the new nobility. His chateau near Blois was against him; though I could say much."

"Say nothing against Count De Chau-

Chaumont's manor house less than a year.

Before that my life was spent in the woods with the Indians, and they found of the new. Fools! If we princes had stood of the new. Fools! If we princes had stood of the new. Fools! The potter, stooping half over and roll-He had a smiling good face, square, but well curved and firm. Now that I saw him fronting me I could trace his clear eyebrows, high forehead, and the laughter ried to open the door for him. The animal ried to open the door for him. The animal ried to open the door for him. clawed vigorously inside, and the instant I pushed back the ill-fitted slabs, it strained through and rushed on all fours to the fire. Madame de Ferrier fled back-ward, for what I liberated could hardly be seen without dread. It was a human being. Its features were a boy's, and the tousled hair had a natural wave. While it crouched for warmth I wave. While it crouched for warmth I felt the shock of seeing a creature about my own age grinning back at me, fishy eyed and black mouthed.

I remembered the boy Madame Tank self or this less fortunate cre-ature was the boy, my heart went very pitiful toward him. Madame de Ferrier stooped and examined him; he made a juicy noise of delight with his ature

"This is not the boy you had in London, nonsieur." she said to Bellenger. The potter waved his hands and shrug-

You believe, madame, that Lazarre is Philippe.

"I am certain of it."
"What proofs have you?"
"The evidence of my eyes." "Tell that to Monsieur!" exclaimed the

"Who is Monsieur?" I asked. "The eldest brother of the king of France is called Monsieur. The Count de rovence will be called Monsieur until he Provence will be called Moisieur until he succeeds Louis XVII. and is crowned Louis XVIII.—if that time ever comes. He cannot be called Louis XVII.—the man who told me to call him Louis Philippe took my arm, and I found myself. Philippe took my arm, and I found myself walking back and forth with him as in a dream while he carefully formed sentence after sentence. "Because the dauphin who died in the Temple prison was Louis XVII. But there are a few who say he did not die; that a dying child was sub-stituted for him: that he was smuggled out and carried to America. Bellenger was the agent employed. The dauphin's sister is married to her cousin, the nephew of Monsieur. She herself believes these things; and it is certain a sum of money is sent out to America every year for his maintenance. He was reduced to imbecility when removed from the Temple. It is not known whether he will ever be fit to reign if the kingdom returns to him. No communication has been held with him. He was nine years old when reoved from the Temple; he would now be in his nineteenth year. When I last saw him he was a smiling little prince with waving hair and hazel eyes, holding to his mother's hand"-

"Stop! The frenzy of half recollection came on me, and that which I had put away from my mind and sworn to let alone, selzed and convulsed me. Dreams, and sensa-tions, and instincts massed and fell upon me in an avalanche of conviction.

I was that uncrowned outcast, the king

The liniment bottle and flannel strip are familiar objects in nearly every household. They are the weapons that have been used for generations to fight old Rheumatism, and are about as effective in the battle with this giant disease as the blunderbuss of our forefathers would be in modern warfare.

Rheumatism is caused by an acid, sour condition of the blood. It is filled with acrid, irritating matter that settles in the joints, muscles and nerves, and liniments and oils nor nothing else applied externally can dislodge these gritty, corroding particles. They were deposited there by the blood and can be reached only through the blood. Rubbing with liniments sometimes relieve temporarily the aches and pains, but these are only symptoms which are liable to return with every change of the weather; the real disease lies deeper, the blood and system are infected. Rheumatism cannot be radically and permanently cured of rich, strong blood to the affected parts, which dissolves and washes out all foreign materials, and the sufferer obtains happy relief from the torturing pairs.

S. S. S. contains no pairs. until the blood has been purified, and no remedy does this so thoroughly and promptly as S. S. S. It neutralizes the acids and sends a stream
