CITY IN THE DARK; "2300" FOR CURRENT

Last night's storm skidooed the General Electric company—2,300 volts suddenly went out of commission and the switchboard at the East Side station ceased to do business for about thirty minutes. Electric lights all over the city were extinguished, and darkness reigned during the rain, which was falling fast and copiously.

reigned during the rain, which was fair-ing fast and copiously.

At Wonderland park not only the lights all over the grounds were sud-denly shut off, but the power that opa number of the electric devices ceased. Owing to the storm the scenic railway and the chutes were not in op-eration, but at the Old Mill a number of people were placed in a curious pre-dicament.

People here take boats and ride on a sinuous canal which winds along a course of scenic representations of different climes. Twenty boats, each holding eight persons, suddenly stopped gliding and their occupants were left in complete gloom. The mill wheel, which furnishes the current to the stream, had ceased to churn, even the owls' eyes in the fortune teller's cave stopped blinking, and the chimes in the cathedral quit ringing.

In the course of a few minutes men wearing rubber boots and carrying lanterns appeared and slowly pushed the boats along until all had been "rescued." There were about two thousand persons at Wonderland in the different buildings when the lights ferent buildings when the lights went

AGED WOMAN FOUND IN SWOON, INJURED

Mrs. Mary Meisch, 81 years of age, was found lying in semi-conscious condition yesterday afternoon in front of her house at Cypress and McLean streets, St. Paul, by Rev. A. Koenig. She had fallen down the front steps of her home when alone, dislocating both shoulders and breaking her nose. Mr. Koenig called other aid and the woman was taken into the house and a physician summoned. Tho Mrs. Meisch is suffering much, it is believed she will recover in spite of her advanced age and the attending shock of the accident.

FINE AUDITORIUM BUT SMALL CROWD

ST. PAUL PERMITS STORM TO MAR OPENING OF BIG HALL.

One of the best soloists of the sangerfest is the tenor, Daniel Beddoe, who fulfilled the promise his work of the first concert fortold. He has a beautiful voice, full, mellow and resonant, and he sings with the spirit and understanding of an artist. Claude Cunningham, the barytone, fully deserves the praise accorded him for, besides possessing a voice of fine quality, he is an intelligent and thoroly capable singer.

The work of the orchestra, under the direction of Frank Danz, Jr., was exceedingly good, especially so in the Beethoven Symphony No. 8. The largest share of the conducting fell upon the shoulders of Mr. Danz, who, with his orchestra, gave most sympathetic First Grand Concert of Sangerfest and Big Chorus, but the Audience Not What Was Expected, from the Fact that the Great Building Was First Available.

A children's matinee was held this afternoon, participated in by 1,500 St. Paul children. The second and final grand concert will be held this eve-The first grand concert of the sangerfest, held in the partially completed St. Paul Auditorium, was held last evening under conditions which were disappointing. If St. Paul is ever to have appointing. If St. Paul is ever to have an occasion when the people in general might be expected to turn out en masse to fill that long-heralded hall of popular entertainment, "something big enough for any event," the time should have been last night, the occasion of the first concert of the Northwestern Saengerbund. But it threatened rain, it did rain, and it kept raining. Could St. Paul, particularly St. Paul's wife St. Paul, particularly St. Paul's wife and daughters, be blamed for not venturing out?

The Auditorium is not completed, which did not greatly matter, for the walls were up and there was a roof over the inclosure. Perhaps not more than half of the space which some day will be available for a big crowd has been made available for the sangerfest, but last night that half was not filled. The 2,000 men in the mighty chorus did not fill the hillside of space reserved for them; and the audience reserved for them; and the audience of St. Paul and the many visitors did not fill the plains and gentle slopes, the foothills and uplands of the pit, par-quet, parquet circle and boxes. But quet, parquet circle and boxes. But the quality was right; there's no dis-puting that.

Dimensions of Event.

musical event of the dimensions of the Northwestern Saengerbund in grand concert assembled can scarcely be judged or described in the customa-ry terms of polite entertainment. There is a limit beyond which mere bulk cannot carry praise. The excellence of a performance is not increased in direct ratio to its expansion. A Havana cigar is good, but the ability to make a cigar a foot long and three inches thick does not mean a smokefest to a man who loves My Lady Nicotine.

Still, a company of two thousand men of all ages, sizes and conditions, lifting up their voices, more or less finely trained, obedient to the baton of a skilled concertmeister, can produce melody which St. Paul could well afford to pack a new Auditorium to hear, even at the expense of braving a mid-summer thunderstorm. It would well repay that much effort.

This mighty chorus sang well. That statement must go unchallenged, for who has a standard by which he can compare its work? And Theodor Kelbe conducted like the compare its work? And Theodor Kelbe conducted like the consummate master he has proved himself. Of the four numbers which the chorus sang, perhaps the best, certainly the most enjoyed, were the pretty love songs "Scheiden," the music composed by Herr Kelbe himself, and "Du Mein Alles." They were good in that they exhibited the fine shadings such a volume of vocalization is capable of, and the melodies were the very spirit of harmony.

As to the Soloists.

Of the soloists little need be said. Any singer not equipped with steam calliope attachments is at a disadvantage in such a hall. Most singers are trained for concert halls or the limitations of an ordinary theater, and when it is demanded that they fill space larger by many fold, and under conditions in the nature of the case difficult larger by many fold, and under condi-tions in the nature of the case difficult, criticism or comment should be tem-pered with mercy. Herr Daniel Bed-doe contributed "Die Meistersinger," rendering it to the accompaniment of the orchestra. His tenor is pleasing, and but for the too-manifest effort to rise to the occasion, to fill that big hall, there could be little fault found.

there could be little fault found.

Frau Katherine Fleming sang an aria from Meyerbeer's "Der Prophet," and later in the program, Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," both well adapted to her range. Frau Fleming might be commented on adversely on the same score as Herr Beddoe. She, too, could be seen to be trying hard to fill that vast room. She succeeded in a measure, but at the expense of much that makes singing enjoyable. If she did not always have perfect control of her voice, and did not always do with it all she could have done under more advantageous conditions, it must be remembered that much was required of her. She seemed to be the favorite solcist. The soprano of Frau Rider-Kelsey, in her interpretation of Liszt's "Lorelei" was certainly pleasing to all who made any fine discrimination. She did with any fine discrimination. She did with her voice all that one could expect her to do, and she did it well.

The Great Orchestra.

The orchestra, numbering about fifty The orchestra, numbering about fitty instruments, more than half of them violins, redeemed the program from the novelty of bulk of the chorus, and the strivings after the impossible of the soloists. Two numbers on the program were assigned to the orchestra, "Lichtertanz" by Berlioz, as the opening number and the ever nonview and alnumber, and the ever popular and al-ways beautiful Hungarian rhapsody No. 2. The latter in particular was well rendered, the preponderance of the strings bringing out all the possibilities of the marvelous harmony. The brass was effective, and under the baton of Frank Danz, Jr.. the orchestra won a fame in this grand concert which the loyal twin city people can not fail to appreciate.

The Matinee Concert.

The concert of yesterday afternoon attracted another large audience. In many respects the program was more enjoyable than at the opening concert. The soloists were all heard to better advantage and the St. Paul Choral club, which arrived nive minutes after the association occurred. Altho he could have been taken to the hospital in three minutes more, Christianson indignantly refused to get into the patrol wagon. He simply lay in his wagon white excited pedestrians telephoned for another ambulance from St. Barnabas hospital. After he had waited an hour by the side of one ambulance, the St. Faul Chora tend, which has had many trials and tribulations the past season, achieved a distinct triumph in the first and second round the first of Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation." The attacks were clean and sure, the shading good, and each member seemed imbued with a determination and a desire to do good work and an enthusiastic appreciation of the music. G. H. Fairclough conducted. The Liederkranz from Milwaukee, under the direction of Charles Orth, was the first visiting society to be heard, and right royal was the welcome accorded it. Tho the program distinctly stated "no encores," the audience refused to be silenced until the society had given two extra numbers. There which has had many trials and tribula had given two extra numbers. There are some excellent voices in the society and the members sing with enthusiasm and spirit.

The soloists were all given wider opportunities than at the first concert.

Mrs. Katherine Fleming carried off the honors in many ways. Mrs. Fleming has a voice of beautiful timbre and a quality rare in a contraito tempera-ment. She sings with dramatic inten-sity and feeling. She needs, however, to cultivate more repose, altho it is possible that the big auditorium caused
