RED CROSS NEEDS 25 SEWING MACHINES
200 Young Women Ready to Do Relief Work.

The War Department Red Cross auxiliary very much needs the loan of twenty-five sewing machines. Over 1,200 young women are already doing one night every week for Red Cross work, and work rooms have been established in number of churches, clubs and schools.

There are, however, several thousand more women who are willing to anxious to give their time for Red Cross work, and the employees of the War Department have raised nearly $10,000 to buy materials. The thing that holds back the work is lack of sewing machines.

There must be at least 25 families, said Miss Jessie Dell, chairman of the War Department Auxiliary, who have sewing machines at home and are willing to loan them to the Red Cross. They have taken good care of, and kept in safe place, until the end of the war, or until their return is requested.

ALLTOP PRESIDENT TENDERED RECEPTION
French Jesuit, Now Lieutenant, Speaks at Georgetown.

Judge Charles A. DeCourcy, of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, presided at the annual meeting of the Alumni Association of Georgetown University last night, at which an enthusiastic reception was tendered by John B. Creedon, the new president of the university.

The meeting was featured by an address from Lieut. Marcel Jousse, a French officer of artillery, who has served four years in the heavy artillery service of the French army. He is a Jesuit priest.

Lieut. Jousse gave a very interesting description of the attitude of the French officers towards the work of the Red Cross during the war. He spoke feelingly of the warm relationships existing between the soldiers of France and the Red Cross, and said the appearance of stars and stripes had an inspiring effect upon all the allied soldiers.

Hun U-Boat Dash to U. S. Dismal Failure--Army Man

Officer, Just Home, Believes Raids Not Ended, and Air Attacks Will Begin, Only to Make Nation Mad.

"Germany's first campaign of frightfulness against the United States has been a dismal failure," said an army officer who has just returned from the western front. This officer was in Paris when the 5-mile gun first went into action, and came through the submarine zone while the submarine raiders were off the Atlantic coast the first week of their best operations.

"The submarine raids on America have come to stay," continued the officer, "but they will have no more military effect than have the air raids on Great Britain and the long-range bombardments of French people at their prayers."

"At the navy officers and anyone who has been watching the development of the submarine had been awaiting the appearance of submarine raiders off this coast for months. It was simply a matter of development. Either the submarines must be built with a cruising radius of 10,000 miles, some base must be established close to the Atlantic seaboard, or mother ships must accompany them. It was bound to come. Which of the three is the secret, we do not know, but it is probably the development of the long-range submarine."

Accomplished Nothing.
"But what have they accomplished? Sank a few tankers, took one merchant ship and possibly may have sunk the Cyclops with all on board. Granting that, it would mean that Germany has been able to destroy one cargo of manganese and a few lives in three months' effort and with certain losses and waste of men, material and money."

"The parallel with the air raids on cities and the 5-mile gun is exactly the same. It took the long-range gun two days of constant, incessant bombardment to destroy twenty people. That might at first be supposed to accompany it."

"Those shells dropped into Paris at almost regular intervals, but they were like lightning bolts out of the clear sky. They gave no more warning than if the victims had been stricken with heart disease—perhaps fifteen seconds. They, of course, were a military failure."

"As to affecting the morale of the French people, they only made France more determined than ever, if such a thing were possible. Two years of air raids on Britain have destroyed less than two thousand lives. Another tank railway failure."

Probably Air Raid Here.
"Air raids on our coast are not at all impossible or improbable. We hear that the Germans have a submarine airplane launch from the vessel. That is, of course, possible and probable. But what can it accomplish?"

"It would take a submarine at least an hour to get an airplane out of her hold and assemble it on the water, and they would have to have clear weather. The airman would be able to make a flight and possibly drop a few bombs; but his chance of returning to his vessel would be small. Certainly he would not be able to do it in the day-time, with the destroyers and patrol moving up and down."

"His chances at night would be one in ten million. The airplane, of course, would be lost. The submarine would stand about one chance out of fifty in lying off the coast long enough for assembling the plane and then waiting for the airman to return."

"The submarines undoubtedly will come from time to time, but they cannot enter a port, for reasons very well known. Their first appearance has been a military failure, but a most excellent thing in molding the determination of the people of this country to carry to the successful end the war against a cowardly, dastardly, unhelpful woman and children."
