"Good Morning, Judge"

Human Interest Stories of Police Court Happenings.By RUDOLPH FERKINS

His "Church."

It was on Sunday afternoon.

Harry Evans had intended going to church. In fact, he was all dressed up for that purpose.

Bill Timmons came around to the house. The pair talked for a while.

An hour later they were both shooting craps behind a board fence in a neighboring alley.

The cops caught on to the trick and arrested both of them.

Notwithstanding what the policeman testified, Harry swore that he was in church and not at the crap game.

Just because he was dressed for church, his alibi was complete, he thought.

Of course, it all depends on what you call church. And since some boys worship at the shrine of the Goddess Chance, it may be that Harry was "worshiping" after all.

Furthermore, Harry insisted, it was against his religion to roll the bones on Sunday.

He had no hesitation about doing it through the week, he intimated.

But since the policeman had two perfectly good eyes, it is known Harry into the bargain, it was easy for the court to convict the craps-shooter.

Each was fined $5—but Bill is not $10. He lost $10 to Harry; therefore, he really paid both fines.

Such Impatience.

One morning last week Bertha McFarlane woke her husband up at three a. m.

She compelled him to dress and come downstairs into the parlor.

"Ah, wants you, George," she told him, "to go on out with me to Minnie Purcell's house. That woman called me out last night in an awful way."

George balked. But Bertha insisted and he went out with her.

Minnie was home. She was in the dining room when the door opened.

"Now, yo backbiter," snapped Bertha, "Ah wants you to take back what you said, else mah husband will beat yo brains out."

"Ah want do it," said Minnie. "Wot Ah said Ah will stan' by."

George stood her to apologize. But Minnie stood her ground.

Bertha slapped at her. Minnie dodged and swung around and Bertha dropped on the floor.

George stood motionless. Minnie got up and came after him. He ran.

He didn't lose a minute.

Minnie then went back to Bertha and pounded her head with the stick.

"Ah will pay mah fine, Judge," said

Minnie. "Ah am sorry I broke de law, but glad Ah whipped 'em. It was only a $10 fine."

A Sharp "Joke."

"Judge, mah husband cum to me de odder night an told me he was gwine chop off mah head. Ah axes him whyfore he gonna do that en he said it was because he wanted to go out West en be a Mormon."

"Did he try to chop off your head?" the court asked Mary Sanders.

"He never honed his razor, Judge," answered Mary. "en Ah guesses dat is de reason he ain't done it yet. Maybe wen he gits it sharpened he might try it."

Phil Sanders, the husband, works at the barber trade. He sharpens razors for everybody but himself.

Saturday night, when Mary made a big hole in his pay envelope by going to market, he got pestered.

They had an argument about how much was spent, and both lost their tempers.

It may be possible that Mary doesn't know that a razor need not be so awful sharp to cut the way Phil threatened to cut with it.

She believed that as long as the razor remained unsharpened her head was apt to remain where it is now.

Phil said that he was only joking. He hasn't the heart to do what he said he would do.

"I'll take your personal bonds this time," the court said to Phil, "but cut out joking with the razor."

Tough Luck.

About the first of June Lottie Crump wrote to her beau, Elisha Mason, who lived way down in Virginia, and told him to come to town and get a job.

Elisha came. He got a job on government construction work and boarded with Lottie's people.

Another girl named Theresa Cartwright, has been bringing some lunch to her father every day. Her father worked on the same job with Elisha.

It was only a few days before Theresa and Elisha got to know each other real well.

Lottie began to notice his apparent coolness. And with a woman's intuition she got busy to find the reason.

Sunday afternoon, as Theresa and Elisha were boarding a car to go to Anacostia, Lottie hove in sight and called him.

The two walked over to where Lottie was. Lottie made some unladylike remarks about Theresa and other things.

Elisha tried to keep them apart—but they got together and fought it out in the street.

Then Elisha backed off the scene, but he was still there.

Both girls were arrested for fighting. Theresa looked as though she got the worst of it.

Elisha paid Theresa's fine of $10, but neglected Lottie.

Contaminating the Young.

The mystery has been solved. For two girls who were known to be in the city, but who were not in the city, were found in the city.

Mitchell Loomis was arrested for the theft, as Irene naturally supposed some smart crook took her book.

She was visiting in the house where Mitchell roomed. She had her purse in her bosom, which was covered by a very thin waist.

A youngster of three or thereabouts sat on her lap for a while during the visit.

When she got home she discovered her money was gone. She was positive, too, that she had it where it couldn't be taken without her knowing it.

When the truth leaked out it was discovered that Mitchell had bribed the youngster with a nickel and persuaded him to slip the purse out of his hiding place as he sat on Irene's lap, and sneak it to him.

The little boy got scared and he told Irene pretty much the same story.

Because he has a good record, the court suspended a 30-day sentence.

CLERK OF MUNICIPAL COURT DIES IN D. C.

Frederick G. Aukam, clerk of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, died yesterday afternoon at Garfield Hospital after an illness of nearly a month. Mr. Aukam recently underwent an operation and was recovering when complications set in which culminated in his death. Funeral services will be held at his late residence, No. 3149 Mt. Pleasant street northwest. The remains will be taken to Troy, N. Y., for interment in Oakwood cemetery.

Mr. Aukam came to Washington from Troy, N. Y., in 1888, where he had been engaged in the manufacturing business for many years.

Upon the creation of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia in 1909 Mr. Aukam was appointed clerk. His position he occupied continuously up to the time of his death. He was a member of the B. B. French lodge.

Mr. Aukam is survived by his son, George Aukam, of the District of Columbia, and one daughter, Mrs. B. K. Jarboe, of this city.

He is survived by his wife, two sons and two daughters. Funeral services will be held at his residence, 729 Fifth street, this morning at 11 o'clock. Burial will be made in the cemetery of the congregation in Anacostia.

Gilbert Wilson, Song Master, to Show Chorus

Gilbert Wilson, song master from Quantico, the big marine camp near Washington, wants to display the community chorus which has been singing at Central High School every Sunday, in a program of folk and patriotic songs that will make a strong public appeal in the Capital. He is organizing the members now, and rehearsals may be called for this week to enable the singers to perfect their harmony.

Mr. Wilson was soloist at the mass singing at Central High School Sunday, having Miss Mary Helen Howe as assistant. He sang three songs which were composed by the Marines at Quantico. Louis Potter was at the piano.
