FRENCH VIEWS OF AMERICAN DRESS.

We give below an admirable article on the subject of Gentlemen's Dress in America, translated from the French of the eminent journalist Blague de Quanart, whose contributions to the principal Parisian and Belgian journals of late years attracted so much at-

It has often been remarked by travellers, that one of the predominant characteristics of our American cities is their newness. Everywhere there is a fresh, bright color, and an expression of recent manufacture : the houses seem to have been turned out by thousands to order, and look as if just finished in one colossal batch-the pavements are washed as if for a holiday-the very trees on the side walks, in their elaborately trimmed neatness.

look as if they were young, and not yet accustomed to a regular growing life-in short, the endless newness and recent fashion of everything creates at last a feeling as though the whole city were for sale, and its proprietors were bent on keeping it as clean, and as much in the style as possible, so that no opportunity to praise it as "a neat and tasty

But not in houses alone do we perceive end-ess newness and never ending submission to the mode as though the Americans, who have succeeded thus far, better than any other nation in annihilating space, were bent on defying Time also, and leaving no trace of his progress in the past. These people, so rapid, so brusque, when threatened with delay, so intoxicated with the endless spirit of business, still contrive to present in their persons a newness and freshness of attire which altogether corresponds with their houses, and which, to a practical philosopher, is perhaps one of the most curious of the lesser phenomena of the race. For, as among the houses, there are but few of those palatial edifices so common in Europe, although their freshness and luxury of paint and scrubbing distinguishes them entirely from the citizen homes of France and Germany, or even England, so the American, though but rarely a fashion-plate dandy, still in his style and attire maintains on an average, an infinitely higher standard than that aspired to by his colleague in perhaps in the same line of life in Europe gardens of all the flowers of fashionable attire, where the robes and flounces of Victo-rine wave in harmony with the artistically all that, find yourself in a multitude of well dressed people. No, even there the long baired peasant en blouse-the artist, fierce.

picturesque, and sometimes dirty-the old gentleman who recalls the storms of the revolution, and who clings fondly to his long queue and coat a la Mazrrin, (or who, rather, suffers them to cling to him)-all these persons, picturesque though they may be, break in upon the idea of plain good dressing. They

But let some one who can recall the best dressed street multitude which he has ever seen in Europe, walk some fine morning up an American street, and that at about nine preference, I would commend Broadway, New York for this observation, since I can recall no other city in which such a vast flood of life flows through one single street You who have only seen the Boulevards, or the Pont Neuf, when most filled with passengers, or who have derived ideas of a crowded thoroughfare from that terror to strangers, the Strand in London, or who believe that the Vienna Prater was ever too full on the day of a high procession, would regard them all as dreary solitudes when compared with Broadway. In all this immense multitude there is not one who is not more than passably dressed; and if you see a single person among them whose boots are not faultless, or with soles which are not thin as a rose leaf, you may rely upon it that he is an Englishman, a German, or a millionaire None but a foreigner, or a man whose standing is more than secured in society, would dare transgress the law of good boots, which weighs more heavily upon the American than all the ten commandments Chiefly are we impressed with the fact that among all these fine clothes there is nothing outre-nothing absurd-unless it be indeed an occasional instance given by some one who in his intense eagerness to keep up with the fashion, has actually leaped beyond it. In this uniformity-this dread of being "odd"- we have a curious illustration of one of the ultimate social effects of a republic. In all communities where every one exercises freely many. This public opinion, confined in Eu-a few bad points, and many good ones. It is the cause of a little hypocrisy and of much sound morality. It suffers no one to wear an old coat, but condemns to a dreary and desperate life of brandy, of clubs and of stables,

It is a striking peculiarity of all this fine dress-of all this breadcloth and velvet in in winter, and of all this delicate linen Oriental cloth, which look like woven air, in summer, that it is enormously expensive. The to its utmost extent, would tremble with terror could he know the prices which those clothes cost, and the sacrifices which some of those young clerks are imperatively obliged to make "to preserve appearances," and with them their situations Yet with all this, as I have before said, there is but little elaborate dandyism, ion which requires the young man rising in the world to conform to a certain standard, also forbids him from going beyond it. I do not remember to have seen or heard it remarked, but I am none the less certain that to succeed among Americans, and above all to acquire with them the slightest influence

I am convinced of this from the frequency with which I have heard one American, while disparaging another, say "He is slovenly."

This was always a concluding argument, and sufficed to silence the warmest friends of the

One of the most curious instances narrated to me, and which singularly illustrates this American mania for neatness, relates to the very eminent journalist and politician, Horace Greely, who adopted a style of excessive carelessness in his outer garments, simply to attract attention to the exquisito finene's of his linen and his personal cleanliness in the use of the bath. All of his friends were carefully informed of this latter peculiarity, and when some ignorant opponent endeavored to blacken the character of Horace by speaking of old hat and boots, he was at once confuted with-" Ah! my dear, you deceive yourself-Greely is very particular in his shirts and drawers!" I have heard, but do not vouch for the fact, that the lingerie-the linen of this eminent man costs from ten to fifteen thousand francs

It will readily be understood that where must be a perfect paradise for the man who desires to obtain an insolent notoriety in the cheapest and readiest manner It is very possible that some of my readers have heard f an ancient teacher of languages who resolved a few years ago in Paris, to become notorious by his dress. What pains, what agony of invention and of extravagance the unfortunate was obliged to undergo, ere he could attract attention. Bands of blue, scarlet and yellow ribbon, six inches wide, twined around his hat and trailing six feet from ita scarlet velvet cape and gilt shoes hardly. caused as much observation as would be granted in America to a man with a cloak over his arm.

There lived not long since in New York, a man whose peculiarity was that he wore very old, very ragged and very dirty clothes; and, in addition to this had no fixed place of abode, but slept in lime kilns or barns. "Nothing very remarkable, this," one would say, in Europe, where every city has thousands of such vagrants. Ah! but you do not understand America! That lime kiln vagabond was one of the lions of New York-his ap pearance in Broadway was chronicled in the first papers; when some one gave him a new old-coat, it was put down as an event in their reports-when he died, the press embalmed his memory in obituaries, a thousand canards were let fly to his early life, a drama introducing him in his dirty coat, drew tears from the eyes of the ladies, and as I write a novel entitled "The Limekiln Man" lies before me. Ask the first New Yorker whom you meet, if he has ever heard of the Limekiln man? There is a man who forms one of the "insti utions" of Philadelphia-everything is an institution in America-to whom there oc curred one day the brilliant idea of walking with the gait of a young recruit undergoing his first drill. This startling, this wondrous, this amazing conception was crowned with the fullest success-a success which he further se cared by wearing his hat on the back part of his head and tucking his pantalogns into his boots! Wonderful genius! happy man! On fine days you may see him watking along Chesnut street-the fashionable street of Philadelphia-condescendingly touching his hat to every lady, while all the world murmurs after him, "There goes the Man with the Military Walk." It is needless to say that the few young or When you promenade even the Boulevards of with wealth and leisure, and who give themmiddle aged men in America who are gifted Paris, or ride in the Champs Elysees-those selves up seriously to living for dress alone, succeed amerveille in attracting admiration, envy and hatred-as in all parts of the world. constructed coats of Humann-you do not, for Americans succeed in dress when they give themselves entirely up to it, it is really amazing that such lions are so rare among them. The "gilded youth" of European capitals are not more elaborate, more butterfly-like, more perfectly exogenous, as they say in botany of those plants whose growth is entirely outward, than are the young men who appear at soirces and receptions in Atlantic American

I have not exhausted this subject-nay, I have not begun it. But I have said enough to show you that in America, as in all parts of the world, the social spirit of the people, its government and its morale, are all, to a degree, mirrored in their dress

American Phlegm.

Life Illustrated quotes the following story from the American experience of a "Monsieur Affred d'Almbert" who having toured this country through, of course published his last ideas about it to the world at large.

Far away from the great cities, half hidden in the foliage, was the modest log hut of a man, half trapper, half fisherman, and more than half savage. Of course his name was Smith. He was married, and he and his wife in this one little chamber led the happiest life in existence, for on an occasion she would not object to go twenty miles to hear the Baptist micister preach. One evening at sundown they were both together in their little cabin, she knitting stockings for the next winter's snows, he cleaning the barrel of his fowling piece-all the parts of which were lying dismounted about him-both busy and neither uttered a syllable. By degrees a dull but regular sound breaks upon the silence of the wilderness The steam er is ascending the river, making the best of

There is no doubt that these expectations will be realized in less than walf a century.

A CONCLUSIVE REASON. - The best and most conclusive reason for an effect that we ever remember to have heard, writes a western correspondent, was given by a "one idea" Dutchman, in reply to a friend who remarked, Why Hans, you have the most feminine cast of conntenence I have ever seen." "O yaw" was the reply. "I know de reason for dat; mine moder was a woman."

WITTY REPARTEE .- A young fellow was talking politics with a young lady he adored, named Mary, and she sympathized with the Know Nothings. "Oh," said she, in a de-preciating tone, "I see you are not a Know Nothing." "Oh! no, of course," said he; "how could I be when I worship the Virgin
