THE MEMBER OF CONGRESS, alluded to in THE STAR of Saturday as being charged with fraud upon the Pension Office, is Roderick R. Butler of Tenn. It is alleged that in 1869 Mr. Butler was the at orney to procure a pension for a soldier's widow living at Horse Creek, North Carolina. The case having been found apparently correct, a check for the back money, amounting to $473, was sent to the pension agent at kaleigh, N. C., who in turn forwarded it to Butler at Washington. The check reached agent at Kaleigh, N. C., who in turn forwarded it to Butler at Washington. The check reached here and was cashed at the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., it bearing the endorsement of the widow at Horse Creek. The schedule of time at the Post Office Department showed that nine days was the shortest possible time a letter could go from Raleigh to that place and return to Washington, and if a single connection was missed, twelve days would be required. Suspicion was aroused at the department, and an investigation disclosed the fact that the pensioner could not write her name, and, further, that she had not received the money. Mr. Butler was immediately called on for an explanation, and he admitted having signed the check, but claimed he had the power of attorney to do so. After a long delay he produced a paper purporting to be a power of attorney from the claimant, and also an affidavit taking back all she had said in her former statements. These two documents, bearing dates at periods widely different, were at first taken by the Pension Office as a satisfactory explanation, and the investigation was suspended. Other charges coming in, in investigation was placed in the hands of another special officer, the former one having left the bureau; and an examination showed that the two latter documents were written on the same sheet of paper, although there were six months of the court attached was affixed by the clerk, who is a son of Butler. The case is now in the missed, twelve days would be required. The case is now in the hands of an officer who has instructions to throughly investigate it.

Serious charges are also pending against John A. Wimpey, member elect from Georgie; and B. F. Patrick, a member of the New York Legislature, has been arrested on a charge preferred by the Pension Office.

tomac for sail boots of 25 feet and under, from 7th-street wharf, around a boat off Fort Washington, and return, which attracted a great deal of interest. This morning the scene at the 7thstreet wharf at the starting was brilliant and animated in the extreme, a large number of spectators being present, including many ladies. These races were gotten up by Mr. George Sheckels, of the Fulton restaurant at the wharf, who offered as a prize a silver cup, to be run for by the smaller boats, and for this race the folby the smaller boars, and for this race the fol-lowing entries were made: Fairy, Capt. Goo. Miller; Zephyr. Capt. Crane; Blonde, Capt. Fitzsimmons; Neconecon, Capt. Moffitt; Folly, Capt. Bell, and Greyhound, Capt. Rotterbarg. For the purse race, for $159, the entries were as follows: Curlew, Capt. Thos. Shreeves; John H. Adams, Capt. John Sewell; Witch of the Wave, Capt. R. Brown; Dolphin, Capt. W. McDermott, and Little Ella, Capt. Ed. Tasker. The Wawreset had been employed to accomdecks were crowded. The steamer C. P. Smith at the Sixth street wharf, where there was a beautiful display of bunting, took on board a number of passengers as also did the Arrow, bound for Mount Vernon, Marshal Hall and other points.

The following were the indees: R. Cox. M.

The following were the judges:-B. Cox, H. Kurtz, H. W. Knight, J. H. Sessford and Wm. Evans. About 8% o'clock they called the cap-tains of the smaller boats (for the cup race) together and the rules having been read they were directed to get their boats in line near the buoy off the wharf, which was done in a very short time, and at nine o'clock the signal gun for casting off was given and the boats got under way beautifully, notwithstanding there was but a light breeze from north of west at the time. the Blonde taking the lead and maintaining it until they had got beyond the Arsenal, when they were apparently on a line. When they had passed the Arsenal the wind from the same quarter freshened up somewhat. Directly after the smaller boats had got off repreations were made for the race between the big boats. As the boats took their stations in the following order: Dolphin to windward, Ella, Adams, Witch, and Curlew, complimentary remarks were passed on each, and more particularly on the Ella and the Baltimore boat The Ella. a white boat, of fine model, fell in her place with mainsail, topsail, and jib; the Witch is also painted white, and used a very large mainsail and two jibs. The Dolphin, the brag boat of the eastern section of the city, had a maintop and jib, and the Curlew, a black boat, in addition to main, top and jibs, had also a square-cail. The Adams, (Baltimore boat,) a black boat, had a mainsail, topsail, and jib set. At precisely 10 o'clock the signal westired and the boats got under way, the Ella, Witch, and Adams being on a line, but soon the Curlew put up her square and commenced to gain.

Stretching off towards Alexandria, the Ella took the lead and maintained it to nearly opposite that city, when the Baltimore boat, which had been following her close, drew ahead, amid the wild applause of the Baltimore party on board of the Wawaset, headed by Capt. Crouch, one of the owners of the Adams. The betting was very exciting at this period of the race, and both the Washingtonians and the Baltimoreaus seemed inclined to bet their bottom dollar on their respective boats. The boats passed Alexandria in the following order: 1. Adams; 2. Ella; 3. Dolphin; 4. Curlew; 5. Watch of the Wave. The wind was moderately good, but not enough to be serviceable to a boat of the size of the Witch of the Wave; but whenever it freshened up from time to time she picked up in her pace in a way to show what she could do with a sufficient breeze. Below Alexandria the race swept on with varied fortunes for the leading boats for some The race was closely contested throughout, and is said by knowing ones to have been the most beautiful one ever had in our waters. On the way down the Little Ella and Adams (Baltimore boat) hugged each other closely, as also on the home run, and the excitement on the steamers was quite high and betting lively, our Washington boys investing of course in the Ella. The stake-boat off Fort Washington was rounded as follows :- Ella at 12:15; Adams. 12:16; Dolphin, 12:20; Witch, 12:23; Curlew, 12:28.

The excitement after rounding of the buoy increased. On the up stretch a smart breeze was struck off the Red House, (about five miles below Alexandria,) when the Ella took the lead and kept it home, the Adams hugging her

The news of the result of the race having got abroad, about 2 o'clock a large number of persons gathered about the wharves and boarded the boats and vessels in that vicinity while the banks were lined with ladies and a plentiful supply of bunting from Sheckells made the scene a lively one. The Little Ella rounded the stake-boat off the wharf at 2:12; the Adams at 2:17; Dolphin, 2:18; Witch, 2:23%, and Curlew,

Of the small boats the Fairy took the lead, and kept it most of the way, being the first to round the stake boat off Fort Washington, and reaching here directly after the Adams, rounding the home boat at 2.17, and the Folly coming next in 2.25%.

As the formost boats rounded the stake boat cheer after cheer rent the air and their crews when they came ashore they were heartily congratulated, the crew of the Adams particularly, and immediately threw down the guantlet to the Ella to give them a race in the Patapsco, and it is likely that a match will be made, in which event there will be an exciting contest.

What We Do and How We Dress in Saratoga-Long Trains - Racing Cos-tumes - White and Bust-The Washerwoman-The Latest in Hats, Etc. [From Our Fashion Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, July, 1870. Sitting in my quiet room, Saratoga filled with pleasant sights, ears with pleasant sounds, it is rather difficult to imagine myself in the hot-bed of fashion, such as Saratoga is supposed to be. It reminds me, as indeed one is reminded constantly, that the difference between one thing and another is not so great after all-only the difference between the black of the pot and the black of the kettle-and that about as much pa-tience is required with the virtue of the good as with the acknowledged faults of their weaker brothers and sisters.

Saratoga is in its glory this beautiful summer, and is crowded with visitors from every State and nationality. It is warm, but the air is so fine and dry that the heat is not enervating, and one feels none of the lassitude and exhaustion that accompanies a "heated term" in the city. Almost the only thing that I object to about Saratoga is the kind of people that are here to enjoy it. They are the drones, and not the workers, of the hive, and it is the workers that I should like to see resting or reveling in the shade and beauty of this pleasant land.

or the virtue of the breeze that revives us.

How we dress in saratoga of the past and the Saratoga of the past and the Saratoga of the present, due, I hope and believe, to the increused thought and intelligence of American women. There are no more women who dress ave times a day, and there is no necessity for changing in any respect the habits of refined women at home. Four out of five dresses worn are linen, cambric, or muslin, neither of them expensive materials; nine out of ten are short, and few are more elaborate than the present style requires even ordinary costumes to be. At any rate, the variety is so great, and the freedom to de as you please so entire, that any dress can be worn

To-day there were two boat races on the Po-

THE FEATURE OF THE SEASON. The feature of the season is the Polonaise, which is made in all sorts of materials to complete every variety of costume. I have men tioned this in preceding letters as likely to be exceedingly popular, and the event justifies the prediction. They are properly and most usefully made in linen, the length of a short dress, and looped up at the side, over the skirt, so as to display it. The skirt may be of any color of material, but it is generally of black silk, and the sash worn with it is of wide black grosprain ribbon striped in roman colors. When the Polonaise is worn for traveling it is let down its whole length, and then covers the skirt or dress. The Polonaise is often made in silk. or dress. The Polonaise is often made in silk, satin and muslin, richly trimmed, and worn over a trained skirt of a different material or a contrasting color. The sash is always of wide ribbon fringed on the ends and richly embroid-ered in colors. The Polonaise will be very fashionable in cashmere for fall wear, and together with rich silk skirts will constitute most distin-guished walking costumes. French ladies wear cashmere much more than we do; but the firsh ionable tendency to fineness and softme-material seems likely to develop among who does not wish to do so. Then it must be remembered that pretty dresses are part of the regular order of things; that ladies generally take with them all they have got, and change often while they remain, partly because they have the leisure and partly because their stay is builted, and they might as well wear them out.

WHITE AND BUFF. A few years ago, when skirts swept the sidewalk, a white dress upon the streets was not to be thought of, and as most ladies, and especially young ladies, find it convenient to wear in the house dresses that can upon an emergency be ready for the streets, white was rarely seen at all, excepting upon babics and sweet simplicity at evening parties. Short dresses have changed all this, however, as well as many other things, and now white and its cousin buff are almost the summer livery at home and abroad. The change in fashion has made the washerwoman a most important personage, and added a new and most lucrative branch to the business, if the opera-tors only knew how to make the most of it. A public spirited lady recommends all the women who apply to her lately for assistance to open a laundry; and really there is room for fifty good es-tablishments of this kind in New York city alone. The few French laundries here wash and iron beautifully, but charge enormously from two to ten dollars for a single dress, three to fifteen for suits. The public laundries destroy and lose more just appreciation of this exquisite tabric.

If some washerwoman of genius would only open a laundry, advertise to wash buff linen in hay water, prints in boiled bran water, colored and soda, and do just as she said, she would
