HEAVY LOSS AT MOSCOW

DAMAGE DONE WITH GUNS AND TORCH DURING REVOLT.

Now that the excitement about the Moscow revolt has somewhat subsided it is easier to form a just estimate of its proportions A cablegram to the New York World says:

It can be confidently asserted that during the whole uprising and in all the fighting not more than 300 persons were killed and 900 wounded, and of these only 100 were revolutionaries. The rebels did not number more than 5,000 in all. The absurd reports in some English and French newspapers that there were 60,000 supplied with quick-firing guns were simply copied from the reactionary Moscow newspaper Ussky Nystok, which deliberately exaggerated the rebels' strength to gain greater credit for the

The military authorities made several egregious blunders in suppressing the uprising.

Red Cross Fired On.

For instance, soldiers fired on the Red Cross staff, which was organized by surgeons who were members of the Medical Union of Russia, because they were certain that the military medical staff would at tend only soldiers.

"Shoot the Jews' Red Cross" the so! diers cried once, when they fired on the doctors. The fact is that there was not one Jew in that particular band.
On Saturday, when Governor General Doubassoff ordered the Moscow people not to leave their houses before 7 o'clock in the morning, the artillery began to fire at 5 o'clock and many dwellings were so dangerous to remain in that people in their

In the Lefontovia quarter a patriotic pro-cession, organized by the reactionary party was proceeding to a church carrying ban-ners inscribed in the czar's honor and there inserted in the czar's honor and singing the national anthem, when the troops fired on the procession. It was enough that they saw a crowd.

The damage done in the Presna quarter is estimated at $7.500,000.

These blunders gained a certain sympathy for the revolutionaries among the well-to-do classes in Moscow, as did the fact that the rebels forced tradesmen to sell bread and meat at ordinary prices, which were trebled when reinforcements of troops ar

A cablegram from London to the World says: "Nothing is now visible in a whole square mile of the city but smoking ruins," the Moscow correspondent of the Standard telegraphs. "Many mills have been destroyed as well as dwelling houses, and it is estimated that 10,000 persons are homeless or dead. Judging from the enormous heaps of corpses dragged from the ruins by the firemen who are now playing upon the smoldering rulns, the majority must be reckoned as dead.

"On Wednesday night the revolutionaries came within an ace of capturing the pre-fect and the whole administrative quarter, but they failed to push their advantage to the uttermost. "Thursday night witnessed the arrival by

GLADYS UNGER ANOTHER BENE-FICIARY OF YERKES' FAVOR.

There is an element of romance connected closely with the life of Charles T. Yerkes in London during the past eight years, says the New York World. The interest which the great financier has shown in the career of a young American girl, Gladys Unger, Is too well known to many persons on both sides of the Atlantic to be regarded as a secret, though it has never before been made public.

About twelve years ago there lived in St. John's Wood, a well-known suburb of London specially favored by artists. Mr. and Mrs. Jules Goodman. Their house, which is called "The Wigwam," on Acacla road, is one of the ordinary square-built English houses, with a high wall surrounding it. Goodman is a clever black-and-white artist. Both he and his wife are natives of Chicago. Mrs. Goodman had been previously Mrs. Frank Unger of Chicago. Owing to a matrimonial disagreement she left her first husband and went to England, taking her little daughter Gladys. She married Mr. Good-man, and at that time they were in somewhat embarrassed circumstances

Gladys Remarkably Clever.

A near neighbor to the Wigwam was Mrs. James Brown Potter, who took an interest in pretty little Gladys. Gladys was remarkably clever, her drawing and painting being unusually brilliant for a child

After many struggles Goodman succeeded in establishing this stepchild and his wife in Paris, where the girl, then about twelve years old, was taught by the best masters. About this time, perhaps eight years ago, Yerkes was in Paris a great deal. One day, at the house of an American. Yerkes met Gladys and her mother. He took a deep interest in the girl, immediately sent her to expensive masters and, as she sent her to expensive masters and, as she grew older, watched her with affection perhaps not altogether philanthropic.

About this time Mr. and Mrs. Goodman agreed to differ. A separation took place, Mrs. Goodman staying in Paris with Gladys. One day there arrived at a splendid suite of rooms at the Hotel Cecil, London, afashionably dressed young woman, accompanied by her mother and two maids. They had a perfect mountain of trunks. A suite of four or five elegant rooms had been reserved for them by Charles T. Yerkes.

A Familiar Feature of London Life. Gladys Unger, her motor brougham, her beautiful dresses, her costly jewelry, her evident culture and intelligence, and, too, her prettiness, soon became familiar features of London life. It was understood that Gladys painted miniatures and wrote plays.

One day a bolt from the blue descended into the luxurious drawing room of suite No. 27. Hotel Cecil. Yerkes appeared and informed Mrs. Goodman and her daughter that Mrs. Verkes was a state of the control of the contr that Mrs. Yerkes was on the point of ar-riving in London and that she intended coming at once to the Hotel Cecil in order to use suite No. 27, which she had heard had been engaged for her benefit some months previously. There was great scuttling of mistresses and maids, and in an incredibly short space of time, Mrs. Goodman and Miss Unger were en route to Parls. As the 2:20 mail train steamed from Charing Cross a series of cabs and an omnibus station wagon brought Mrs. Yerkes with her goods and hattels to the Hotel Cecil. This narrow escape seemed, however, to have had no special effect on the nerves of Yerkes or his proteges. Mrs. Yerkes did not care much for London, and there-fore did not stay very long. In the course of a few weeks she left for Paris. The day following Mrs. Goodman, Miss Unger and their accompanying paraphernalia re-turned once more to suite 27, Hotel Cecil.

A Home in the Fashionable Quarter. This ingenious game of Box and Cox went on two or three times bety dently having grown tired of so restless a state of affairs, became the possessor of the lease of a handsome house in Charles street, Meantime Miss Unger had arranged with Seymour Hicks and Charles Frohman-possibly with the intervention of Yerkesfor the production of a drama she had written called "David Garrick." This hitherto unknown passage in the life of the great actor was produced at the Vaudeville Theater at a matinee for the benefit of a fund that the king was assisting to raise for the poor.

"David Garrick" was never seen after one performance, but the result must have been most lucrative. At least, Gladys Unger received a very large check and some extremely valuable presents that certainly did not come from the management of the Experience in Play Writing.

Another play from Gladys Unger's pen was produced eighteen months ago at Brighton by Arthur Bourchier, the actormanager of the Garrick Theater. It was largely paragraphed. Miss Unger was interviewed, sketched and photographed in her beautiful home in Charles street, Berkeley Square. There it is that Miss Unger, chaperoned by her fond mother, gives tea parties, luncheon parties and dinner parties to some of the leading lights of the Bohemian world.
Giadys Unger is not more than twenty-quancy of features. Exactly how she has been provided for by the late millionaire is not known positively, but it is certain she holds a long leasehold of the Charles street house, which is crammed with the most exquisite works of art, especially among them being a collection of minia-tures of old Frenc. and Cosway periods, which are practically priceless. Miss Un-ger also has some splendid jewels which she has the good sense not to wear too frequently.

Mrs. Goodman, likewise, is able to display a very attractive set of pearls and dlamonds, supposed to be the gift of the Woman Who Earned $500,000 Weds. Mrs. Flora Davis of Shelbyville, Ind., known among traveling salesmen and wholesale dealers as the most successful business woman in Indiana, and estimated to be worth $500,000, all of which she earned herself, was married this evening to Harry Carson, a broker and real estate dealer. Mrs. Davis was a poor girl, and at the age of twelve, with the assistance of a friend. opened a millinery store on a small scale at Shelbyville. She attended the public schools in the morning and attended to her store in the afternoon, and later, when she arranged to recite at night to her teachers she was nineteen she was head of the largest business in Shelbyville.

Several years ago she purchased one of the largest business blocks in Shelbyville and entered into competition with the older merchants, and since then her store has been enlarged several times, and she now employs the largest number of clerks in the city. It is understood that Mr. Carson will become the active manager of her business after their return from their bridal trip.

Risked His Life to Save Hat. In an endeavor to save his hat, which had been blown from his head by a blast of wind from the Flatiron building corner, in New York city, Orlando H. Peck, a lens manufacturer of that city, was run down by an automobile in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday and possibly fatally injured. Philip Lehman, a New York merchant, was driving the automobile. He was arrested.

Woman Set on Fire by Match. Mrs. Louis Cooper of Trenton, N. ., J while in the cellar of her home yesterday afternoon getting provisions for her husband's dinner, stepped on a match on the cellar steps, and in a moment she was ablaze. Enveloped in flames, she rushed into the dining room, where her husband vainly tried to beat out the fire with his hands. In doing this he was severely burned. The woman's screams attracted her son, who was in the house, and he threw a piece of A GUARANTEED CURE FOR PILES

Violation of Smoke Law. Edward B. Johnson, manager of the plant of the Brennan Construction Company at 8056 K street northwest, was before Judge Mullowny in the Police Court today on a charge of violating the District smoke law. He pleaded guilty to the charge, and after the inspector gave his testimony a fine of $25 was imposed, which was paid.
