Uniform Divorce Statute an Immediate Necessity.

CASE IN VIRGINIA

New York Judge Refuses to Recognize Old Dominion Decree.

MARRIED AND NOT MARRIED

Justice Dowling Rules That Mrs. Ransom is Still the Wife of Her

First Husband.

Special Dispatch to The Star. NEW YORK, May 9.-A decision made yesterday by Justice Dowling in special term, part V of the supreme court, emphasizes the necessity of a national uniform divorce law. By his decision the court says that a decree of absolute divorce which Eva B. Ransom obtained in Virginia from her husband, Port V. Ransom, a son of former Surrogate Ransom, is "of no force or effect" against Ransom in this state.

Mrs. Ransom, who is a native-born Virginian, was married to Ransom in this city in 1890, when she was twenty years old. She got her Virginia decree of absolute divorce from him in 1901 and was married to George L. Browning at the court house, Madisen Va., on April 24, 1906.

Ransom recently sued his wife, who divorced him in Virginia, for an absolute divorce and named her second husband, George L. Browning, corespondent. In his suit Ransom attacked the validity of the defendant's divorce.

Justice Dowling holds that not alone is Mrs. Ransom's Virginia divorce invalid under the laws of this state, but that Ransom is entitled to a decree of absolute divorce from her because she is living with Browning as his wife.

Justice Dowling says in his decision that Mrs. Ransom "is blameless for the situation which has arisen," and that unless she and Ransom can agree upon some arrangement with respect to the custody of the children which is mutually satisfactory they will remain with their mother, "who has cared for them since her separation from the plaintiff."

Had to Leave Husband.

After their marriage Ransom and his wife lived together in this city until May, 1898, when the court says, "by reason of Ransom's habits of life Mrs. Ransom was obliged to leave him, returning to her old home in Virginia." In October of the same year Mrs. Ransom returned at her husband's solicitation som returned at her husband's solicitation and resumed her domicile with him. In February, 1899, she again left him, in the language of the court, "because of her husband's misconduct," and with her children took up her residence in Virginia.

In March, 1901, Mrs. Ransom began a suit in the circuit court of Madison county, Virginia, against her husband for an absolute divorce, and named as correspondents.

som, through his attorney, procured a copy of the decree of divorce and of the record upon which it was founded from the Virginia court.

"Thereafter he requested from Mrs. Ransom the return of certain jewelry he had theretofore given her. During all this time he had failed to provide in any way for his wife and their children."

The Virginia Decree.

The court says that more than four years after Mrs. Ransom got her Virginia decree she married in the state of Virginia, and that two months thereafter Ransom, "who in the intervening time had remained quiescent with respect to the Virginia divorce proceedings," commenced his suit in this city for an absolute divorce, "for the ostensible purpose of having his matrimonial status determined." "The sole question to be now determined." says Justice Dowling, in a very long decision, "is the force and effect, if any, to be given to the Virginia decree by the courts of this state. The first question is whether the Virginia court acquired jurisdiction of the cotton in director of the cotton in director.

whether the virginia court acquired juris-diction of the action in divorce. As to the defendant herein (Mrs. Ransom), I am of the opinion that it did. But, unfortunately, jurisdiction was never acquired over the defendant (Ransom) in Virginia." Validity Not Admitted. The court then says that Ransom wa never a resident of Virginia, never was served with process therein and did not even voluntarily appear in the suit. "While he (Ransom) had himself suggested a legal separation, and had been the guilty cause of the actual separation, and while he knew of the granting of the decree and took occasion of the knowledge to demand back certain presents he made his wife," says the court, "yet I find no way of determining upon the authorities that the Virginia decree is binding upon him in this state.

"Although this state recognizes and en forces the jurisdiction it obtains against non-residents by the publication of a summons, it does not admit the validity of a judgment in a matrimonial action obtained against one of its citizens in another state where there was only publication of process and no personal service or voluntary ap-pearance. There has been no legislative adpearance. There has been no legislative adjustment of this anomalous situation, which has been emphasized by repeated decisions."

Justice Dowling says in conclusion that, in view of the uniform trend of decisions in this state, Mrs. Ransom's Virginia decree is of no force and effect against Ransom here, consequently Mrs. Ransom-Browning is, until Ransom's decree becomes final, still his wife under the laws of this state.
