

GENEVAN IN YOUTH WOOD THE JEALOUS MISTRESS.

Distinguished Himself in His Studies at Orleans—Training Influenced His Career.

Rev. Henry Collin Milton, in North American

The fact that a large part of Christendom is this year celebrating the four-hundredth anniversary of John Calvin's birth is prima facie proof that the immortal Genevan's career had in it some of the true elements of enduring greatness. No name today, ancient or modern, can start more arguments or kindle fiercer controversies than his. No other name is so extensively known as the one hand or more cruel calumnies on the other. Calvinism is Calvin writ large, and Calvinism is to one camp of thought the red flag that irritates and angers, while to another it is little less than the crystallized essence of imperishable truth. It is easy to believe that an intelligent acquaintance with the life and work of this man would require for the task of exercising than of idealizing, and it is so far from concerning those that caricature and abuse as to require for the task of praising that a genuine first-hand knowledge of the personality of the great reformer, of the actual nature of his unswerving work, of the principles which he taught or of his posthumous influence upon history is by no means in every case an indispensable requisite for the work.

In most men's minds Calvin figures as the great thinker of the sixteenth century, who did more than any other to organize the social forces of the reformation. He was nothing if not intellectual, and brought his mighty powers to bear upon the mysterious and perennial problems of religion, and so it is that he stands, classed with such spirits as Augustine and Thomas Aquinas, as one of the few great theologians of the past. This is true, and yet how many forget, if they ever knew, that Calvin was never ordained as Roman Catholic priest, or as Protestant preacher of the gospel. Judged by history, he was at least as much a statesman as a theologian. Although Sir William Hamilton says: "Looking merely to his learning and ability, Calvin was superior to all modern, perhaps to all ancient divines, and he was not only a layman and a lawyer, and whatever of honor or of dishonor attaches to his name must go to the learned and practical professor of the law, but at Noyon in France, was himself an ecclesiastic, but he dissuaded his brilliant and precocious son from taking orders and prepared him for the study of the law. He pursued his legal studies under two very famous masters, Petrarch and the great rival leaders of their time. He received the degree of bachelor of laws at Orleans February 14, 1531, and on leaving the university was elected to the office of professor of laws without the usual fees by the unanimous consent of the professors. It is recorded that he distinguished himself especially in the study of the canon law, and that on one occasion, when the professor was absent for a few days, the youthful Calvin was requested by him to take his place, and he did so with such ability and success as to win the admiration of his colleagues.

Sharpened His Judgment. Without question Calvin's training for the law greatly influenced his whole work. Dr. Philip Schaff says: "The study of jurisprudence sharpened his judgment, enlarged his knowledge of human nature and was of great practical benefit to him in the organization and administration of the church in Geneva, but may have also increased his legal bias and overestimate of logical demonstration."

Calvin's career was the legitimate product of his principles. He was a genius, and a genius is a man whose marvelous versatility of faculty which transcends the limitations of local conditions and the restrictions of time and place, is a greater theologian than many a learned prelate or parson, because he had the rare gift of insight into the great problems of the infinite.

And yet these early days at Orleans had been fixing the mold of his maturer thinking. His theology was to be cast in the categories of jurisprudence. The lawyer begins with the first datum of authority. He declares the rule of action imposed by a superior, which an inferior is bound to obey. The sanctity of that authority is strictly a function of the social order, and the maintenance of that order is absolutely necessary to the lawyer's world.

In the theologian is Calvin the lawyer transferring his thought from the sphere of human jurisprudence to that of the divine. He is a theologian, like the theologian of Holland, his conception of God of Judge rather than that of Governor. Calvin's theology, like that of Luther, strikes its plummet straight to the bottom, was also a theodicy, and it is just this theodicy that is the source of the sense both the seed-thought and the crux of his whole system. His conception of the universe is essentially theistic. "The universe," he said, "is God's creation. It is theocentric—God-centered; it is theocratic—God-governed; it is theologianic—it has its rational basis in the will of the Governor of all; but above everything else, He is Judge of all; and this is the juristic principle on which he builds his whole system."

Calvin's System Building. In speaking of Calvin's system building it must be remembered that what differentiates his theology from a philosophy is the fact that the source from which he drew his material was not the intuitions or exegesis of his own consciousness, but the teachings of the church which he accepted as the inspired Word of God. If he posted his authority by faith that faith, he held, was not without or against reason; and in any case, the authority he must have. A Protestantism, to be sure, has all affairs being charged with responsibility, and it is preferred substituting for it a less preferred infallible book; but it is replied, the charge is based upon a misapprehension. Infallibility is strictly a function of a person rather than of a thing. God only is infallible, and the book is the attested, veracious and trustworthy revelation of His will. A man may presume to usurp the functions of the infallible, but a book never. It is not the book, but the God who speaks by and in the book, that Protestants venerate in their prime veneration. John Calvin found his data in the book, and the prodigious process of his mind was to make a logical and systematic order of the truths which Scripture furnished him. In the technique of this system the legal training of his mind was a mistake, but the positive structure and in the dialectic with which he anticipates and refutes opposing views.

Calvin's view of everything else took its cue from his view of God, and that view was based upon certain legalistic conceptions. The integrity of God's government would be destroyed by His vindication upon His creatures. His law is not legislator only. He is not administrator only. He is the Supreme Lawgiver as such, to speak. He is superior to Himself as the Supreme Ruler of the world.
