Extremely striking and graceful was this foulard frock with its novel use of cordings on the skirt. The bodice was gathered into a pointed girdle-shaped piece at the tront, which mounted to the bust line over a tucker of lace. The sleeves were divided into sections, each finished by a deep tuck, below which were introduced several applique tucks of net in self-tone. This net was also used for the guimpe. The long skirt was shirred at the knees and part way between knee and hips on heavy cords. With this was worn a hat of black with black velvet and white marabou trimming.
