Sunday School Lesson

Rev. Hugh T. Stevenson.

WARNINGS AND PROMISES. (Temperance lesson) Matthew, vii.1-29. Golden Text: Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.—Matthew vii.19.

We conclude with this week's lesso We conclude with this week's lesson our studies in the fundamental teachings of the Lord Jesus, that He gave in His "Sermon on the Mount." If we consider it as a temperance lesson, we will miss its relation to the "mountain message," but if we consider it in its relation to the ideal life, the application of its principles to the modern temperance question can easily be made by all. Let us follow this method.

Our Lord condemned the spirit of prejudice as a method of approach or

Our Lord condemned the spirit of prejudice as a method of approach or attitude toward any individual or question. He warns us against exercising a consorous, cynical and critical spirit in reference to any person or controversy. God is our judge. It is not man's duty to judge. Men cannot consider another's faults fairly unless they have the self-exemination of their other's faults fairly unless they have first made a self-examination of their own life and removed the log (beam) that was in their own eye before they attempt to take out the splinter (mote) from another's eye. Jesus had no sympathy with the censodious criticism of the self-contented, self-pleased and self-righteous. He does not approve of their character or conduct, for their judgment of others is an index of their own character. Unless their characters are changed they will not fare well at the day of judgment, if God applies to them the same principles of judgment that they have used with others. Men will treat them as they treat others. They will reap what they sow. will reap what they sow.

The only way we can deal with one The only way we can deal with one mother as we ought is through possessing at all times spiritual power from above. This fact calls for us to be persistent in prayer. Our neglect of comnunion with God is responsible for much of our shortcomings and most of the failures in life. We need to ask. the failures in life. We need to ask, seek and knock daily at the throne of grace and divine favor. If we pray, our prayers will be answered, for we will receive, find and have opened unto us God's storehouse of blessings. Selfishness in prayer will obtain no answers.

The Golden Rule.

The golden rule is the climax of the "Sermon on the Mount." In it our Lord has condensed into one sentence and stated the principle that should govern all the affairs of life. This golden rule Church (Unitarian), Sixteenth and Harvard streets, will preach tomorrow at 11 o'clock. This is the second in a series of sermons on "Modern Aspects of Religion" which Dr. Pierce will give during February.

Dr. Harold N. Fowler, a special consultant at the Library of Congress, will be the speaker at the book chat at 5:30 o'clock. He will discuss Plutarch's "Morals."

The Fireside Circle for young people will meet, as usual, at 6:30 o'clock, with Woodson P. Houghton as speaker.

At the motion picture hour, at 7:30 rule of life could be found in the words

The fruits reveal the species of the tree, and the fruits of a man's life prove his relationship to Christ. Unless we are rooted and grounded in Him we will lack the power to practice in our daily life the principle of the golden rule.

Christianity is a practical religion. Jesus pointed that fact out in making His application of the outlines of the ideal Christian life, that He gave to them not to be admired as a system of mcrality, but as precepts and principles they were to use in their daily living. He presented to His hearers the difficulties that they faced in trying to live the Christian life by "three pairs of contrasts; the two ways, the two classes of trees and the two kinds of houses." Jesus taught that they ought as Christians to be different from the people of the world. We live in an age when some are seeking to obliterate the differences between the members of the church and the world. There are vital restrictions in connection with living between them. Christ made a sharp and distinct contrast between the broad and narrow way, whose entrances and destinations are totally different. The narrow way trast between the broad and narrow way, whose entrances and destinations are totally different. The narrow way by its attitude of heart and personal experience in their conduct helps develop a Christlike character, while the broad develops an un-Christlike character. One leads upward and the other downward. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Christianity is demonstrated not by its profession but by its possession. It is a question not of the lip but of the life. The product of our daily life, like that of the tree, proves beyond question the reality of our religion. We must all meet the judgment test of our works, which Jesus taught by His parable of the house builders. The foolish builder did not consider the uncertainties of the future. He erected his house in a dry valley, where the waters of the rainy season would wash it away because he had put no foundation under his building. The wise man looked ahead. He sought a place free from the dangers of floods. He selected a place of security and placed a foundation under his house, so that it stood the test of the storms. Every person is a builder. We are constructing our own characters and determining our own characters and determining our own destiny. If we fail to build upon Christ Jesus, when temptations and difficulties Jesus, when temptations and difficulties assail us we will fail and become human derelicts in character. If we build useless lives and face God with wasted careers, the penalty of His judgment will be "Depart from me, for I never knew you."

If we build our lives upon the rock of ages, by obeying Christ's commands, we will be building characters that will stand the test of the struggles and storms of life. If we are faithful to our

we will be building characters that will are described by repeat the condition by the character of urites and public proposal, and remember that the squices and public proposal, and remember that the proposal and public problem that the representatives of the straight and the set of the straight and the straight true one. Gundulf commenced the enlargement of the cathedral a year after his appointment and was energetic in the work until his death. His successor, Ernulf, was even more ambitious, for it was he who added the chapter house, a chapel, five bays, the crypt and ing as carefully worked as the super-structure.

The years 1130 and 1177 were disas-trous for the building, for they mark the years of the two great fires that did much damage to the walls, the choir and the chapter house. Repairs were slow, for these were troublesome years of war, which sapped the financial strength of many another see in the country, but reconstruction went on from country, but reconstruction went on from

No well disposed Christian or non-Christian can be indifferent to the great moral issues embodied in the League, or in any other organization acting in behalf of brotherhood and for restraint of war.

I regard it as essential that all who international peace and security after death, regardless of spiritual form?

A. St. Paul's teaching on the future life should be read in the light of his argument contained in the fifteenth chapter of his first letter to the church at Corinth. There he soars like an eagle above the plain and visualizes the elessedness of the discarnate who are seen subject to the corruptions of the corruption of th

A. Theists agree in the main that the existence of God is not demonstrable. They take exception, however, to the statement that what cannot be demonstrated is illogical. Life's necessities repeatedly leap like a hunted deer beyond the bounds of logic. The individual who undertakes to limit his beliefs and activities to what he can prove would no longer be a social being.

To be concrete, the ordinary scientific view lists man as a product of nature. This implies that nature must be equal to producing man. But man surpasses anything found in nature: He is a moral being, having reasoning

A. Their first and final interest is the evangelization of the world. This carries with it peace and good will a call the image of his God, or he could be either rational or moral; and ries with it peace and good will to all men. Their mission is spiritual, fraternal, supernational and necessitates freedom from entangling political alliances of any kind. In some countries the state church still survives as a heritage from the past. But experience does not commend the union of church and to be a final judgment? In either case will there be a consciousness of individual contents of war.

I regard it as essential that all who prize international peace and escurity should unite for the realization of those great objectives. But they should do so as citizens, not as religionists. This limitation applies to their representation in the League. It is involved in political, economic, financial, territorial and technical matters which are best handled by statesmen, not by theologing or advocates of religion.

As it is, churchmen belonging to the constituent nations of the League are already represented therein by their appointed delegates. They are now in a position to contribute their moral support, give advice, if so desired, upon matters of principle and encourage their fellow citizens to energetically estimate the work of the League. But these efforts, as I see it, should mark the boundaries of their activity as churchmen.

Q. I have recently been told that the existence of God is illogical and without proof. As a layman and a believer in God I should appreciate your answer to this assertion.

A. Theists agree in the main that the existence of God is not demonstrable. They take exception, however, to the statement that what cannot be demonstrated is illogical. Life's necessities repeatedly leap like a hunted deer beyond the bounds of logic. The individual who undertakes to limit his be-visible return while they were still on earth.

They saw him coming in trailing clouds of glory to judge the quick and dead and make a universal restoration of all things. This belief in a final judgment was part of the Jewish eschatology taken over into the New Testament gospel. Behind it and all other theories of the future assize is a solemn emphasis of our responsibility for deeds done in the body. Old and New Testament writers alike insist that we must answer to God for the conduct of our personal life.
