All the information which I have is that which I have obtained from others and which would be legally called 'hearsay.' My use of the report which came to me was casual and my statements were made more to emphasize the existing points against the proposed airport for consideration by the association and not as an expression of my own views. In my statement before the Federation of Citizens' Associations I distinctly came out in favor of the purchase of the airport south of the Highway Bridge, and I stated among other things that unless Congress would purchase it as recommended by the special airport committee it would probably be five years before Washington would have an airport at all. From this it seems that I was in no way reflecting upon the integrity of any Senator. I only referred to the report as a matter for consideration by the opponents of the proposed airport, never dreaming that it would become an issue as to whether or not there was such a report current or as to my authority for making the statement which is the subject matter of this investigation."

The information upon which my statement was based was obtained from a personal friend in confidence and it may be that I misinterpreted his statement as above, but in view of its confidential character I respectfully request that this committee do not require me to disclose it, as no public interest is involved and no matter is pending before this committee which would make it desirable or necessary that I make such disclosure, and it would only result in personal embarrassment to me and to the person whose confidence I had."

Senate Adopts Amendment Whereby Federal Court Passes Judgment.

By the Associated Press. The Senate today returned to the more hundrum details of the tariff bill after a spirited discussion of salacious literature, which ended in the imposi-

Hack Stands Take Up Space. The report pointed out that there is approximately 170,600 feet of curb space on the public streets in the congested area, of which 20,020 feet, about 17 per cent, is not available for parking purposes, this being taken up by hack stands, bus stops, shipping entrances, fire hydrants, driveways, car stops and other purposes. "It is concluded that the various cases of officially designated no parking and 'reserved' spaces in the congested area," the report said, "are either essential or desirable, and that they are not unreasonable in number or extent, utilizing, as they do, less than one-fifth of the total available curb space. "Present conditions are not satisfactory as regards the parking of busses in 'no parking' spaces, the operation of special busses, the loitering of taxicabs, and the uses to which the so-called livery vehicles are being put." The pleas were made with the jury absent only a short time before final arguments in the case were to begin.

As the trial drew into its final stages the defense introduced witnesses in an effort to corroborate testimony given by Doheny yesterday that he personally had nothing to do with the preparation of bids for naval oil reserves.

Danziger said Cotter told him he would wire Doheny about the alternate proposal and the preferential clause, but that he (Danziger) told Cotter it was unnecessary, as he felt he had ample authority to handle the matter without Doheny's environed.

"Mr. Doheny had turned the matter over to me some months before. He said he had promised Rear Admiral J. K. Robison that he would bid on storage tanks at Pearl Harbor," Danziger said, "and instructed me to see that the agreement was carried out."

"I told Mr. Doheny that the proposition (Pearl Harbor) looked like one the company ought to stay away from," continued the witness.

"Mr. Doheny became very heated and said he didn't give a d—— what anybody thought; that he had promised to make a bid and if our company didn't bid he would."

Danziger said Doheny explained the reason for his attitude was the story Admiral Robison had told him of the menace to the Pacific States from the Japanese Navy.
