SIDETRACK PLAN HIT BY CITIZENS

Chillum Heights Group Is Opposed to Rails Near New York Avenue.

Proposals authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to build side tracks near New York Avenue northeast were opposed last night by the Chillum Heights Citizens' Association, meeting in the J. R. Keene School.

A bill is now before Congress authorizing the railroad to construct an "overhead" sort of a side track, east to extend and maintain certain industrial side tracks.

The association believes construction of new tracks would make the cost of bridges over the tracks too high. It was pointed out that civic associations have been seeking for several years to obtain bridges over the present tracks to give better transportation facilities to the area east of there.

Indorsement was given to the petition sent to the Board of Education by the Manor Park Citizens' Association recommending that the new high school be located at Rittenhouse and Fourth streets be named Calvin C. Cullen.

A resolution supporting efforts of the Washington Central Labor Union to promote vocational training in the public schools and the reclassification of schools as junior high schools was passed.

A motion asking that Inspector T. R. Bean and the present general Police Department set-up be retained was referred to the Fire and Police Protection Committee, to be reported on at the next meeting.

The proposal of the Junior Chamber of Commerce asking that daylight-saving time be established in Washington was rejected.

It was recommended that the Tuberculosis Hospital site at Fourteenth and Upshur streets be used for recreational and educational purposes.

Washington Wayside

Random Observations of Interesting Events and Things.

ORDEAL BY MESSAGE. The E street barber shop came the master and his dog. Which was all right, for the latter was a small, unobtrusive, well-behaved sort of Alsatian-mongrel, inclined to retire to a far corner. But, unfortunately, the gentleman, his master, was this morning needing a facial massage. Thereby hangs the tale.

When that fearful machine, a strange thing with a long neck and only a rubber disc for head, rolled by, he cocked a skeptical eye and placed himself on the "qui vive."

Later, when it began to cry out and sing that odd, almost-human "owoo-mau-woo" sort of a sound, it was too much for the little fellow. He rose straight, his back arched, with every hair along his spine quivering. He leaped toward the machine.

"Awfully sorry," the traffic manager told him. "You have done such a wonderful job of boosting air travel you've done yourself out of a seat. We're sold out solid all day. Not an extra plane within 500 miles."

So Rogers gave up and took a train—one of the first rail trips he has made in years.

"I've done a little too much for air travel," Rogers said ruefully as he boarded the train.

SPIKE ARRESTERS. THE Capitol Building has no real "lightning-arrestor" equipment. The spikes in the hat on the figure of Freedom atop the dome are supposed to act as an arrester.

THE LORD MAYOR RISES. BERNARD FITZGERALD, the Irish tenor, called to pay his respects to the lord mayor of Dublin upon the visit of the Right Hon. Alderman Alfred Byrne, T. D., to Washington.

The lord mayor was seated in his hotel suite with his golden chains of office around his neck.

After "Barney" had been presented and the lord mayor was busily engaged giving an interview to some newspapermen, the singer said: "I'll bet I can make the lord mayor rise from his chair without speaking to him or moving from this chair."

"Listen," said Barney Fitzgerald. He began to sing "The Soldier's Song."

Immediately the lord mayor of Dublin stopped his interview, rose from his chair, stood at attention and shouted.

The Irish tenor was singing the national anthem of the Irish Free State.

REFLECTION ON LIFE. IN THE rain, through the mud, from out the vacant lot where it had been lifting up and swinging little tons of garbage all the morning, nosed the monster moron crane.

One of the workmen, appointed to warn pedestrians the huge fellow was coming down the sidewalk. He himself was in mud-caked overalls, not a young man, not at all prepossessing in appearance. The women were well dressed, both this side of 30, daintily tripping along.

"Hey, look out, Jack," shouted the workman, grinning and holding up a hand for caution to the crane operator. "Don't muddy these doll-babies!"

And, believe it, the two dear ladies were pleased beyond discretion; they passed on by the peril, giggling like Miss Skinner's debutante.

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name.

BY RUBY HASKINS ELLIS.

Chisholm

THIS name is of Anglo-Norman origin, which soon after the Norman conquest was established in Roxburghshire and later in Invernesshire, Scotland, where the family founded a small but independent Highland Clan. Their principal seat was in the parish of Chisholm, where was once a familiar saying in Scotland to the effect that there were but four "Thes" in the Highlands—the Chisholms, the MacIntoshes, the Devises, and the Poles. The name, however, is a very old one.

The first mention of the name was in 1296, when Richard de Chisholme swore allegiance to Edward III, and signed the Ragman's Roll. His son, Sir John de Chisholme, knight, fought with Robert Bruce at the famous Battle of Bannockburn in 1314.

Chisholms first put in their appearance in America in New England in 1635, represented by Thomas Chisholme. Later, in 1717, Alexander Chisholme emigrated to the province of Carolina and settled near Charleston (then Charles Town). The Chisholm plantation, called the Retreat, was headquarters of Sir Richard Lee during the Revolutionary War.

Bedtime Stories

The Clever Chuck.

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Your friends, but don't refuse your enemies to do so.

—Johnny Chuck.

FLIP the Terrier, somewhat the worse for wear, had started for home. His nose was very sore and he was going on three legs, for one he could not use. And it was all because he had foolishly attacked a young chick who was big and strong and tough, as well as young, as Flip had discovered to his own undoing. Now the young Chuck was watching him limp away. Suddenly the young Chuck started after Flip, and because the latter had quite a start the Chuck ran. Johnny Chuck, watching from his doorstep, was puzzled. "Now, what is that fellow up to?" he muttered. "Isn't he satisfied with having driven that Dog off? He ought to be, but it looks as if he is running after another fight."

But the young Chuck wasn't. He was willing and ready to fight if he had to, but he wasn't looking for a fight. Far from it. He was simply trying to make use of his enemy. He was trying to make use of Flip.

You see, when Flip finally quit the young Chuck began to realize that although he had driven off that Dog his own situation wasn't the best. First, Reddy Fox and then Flip had

Nature's Children

Mountain Maple (Acer Spicatum).

BY LILLIAN COX ATHEY.

WE ALWAYS think of the maples as lofty-minded folk and few know the three miniature members stems of bright red, they are to be found in the thick woods and forests where mixed hardwoods grow. Look for them this Summer as they walk through the woods and you will be delighted to make their acquaintance.

Usually they are close neighbors to the ground hemlocks and the viburnums. They dwell in the cool shadows and here you may linger and count the many dwellers of this delightful spot.

The mountain maple rarely reaches a height of 30 feet. In fact, it is a shrub and its trunk is about 8 inches in diameter. Its trunk does not have a single knot or blemish. It is another identification point. Besides, its leaves have taper-pointed lobes and they are saw-toothed along the margins. Swinging from long, strong stems of bright red, they are in the Summer, they bring a bright note into the dark woods.

The flowers are small. They are a greenish yellow and have long, narrow petals. You will find them clustered in the small trees in specially selected niches would take too long to wait and there are enough little mountain maples to supply the need.

One of the workmen, appointed to warn pedestrians the huge fellow was coming down the sidewalk. He himself was in mud-caked overalls, not a young man, not at all prepossessing in appearance. The women were well dressed, both this side of 30, daintily tripping along.

"Hey, look out, Jack," shouted the workman, grinning and holding up a hand for caution to the crane operator. "Don't muddy these doll-babies!"

And, believe it, the two dear ladies were pleased beyond discretion; they passed on by the peril, giggling like Miss Skinner's debutante.

Bedtime Stories

The Clever Chuck.

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Your friends, but don't refuse your enemies to do so.

—Johnny Chuck.

FLIP the Terrier, somewhat the worse for wear, had started for home. His nose was very sore and he was going on three legs, for one he could not use. And it was all because he had foolishly attacked a young chick who was big and strong and tough, as well as young, as Flip had discovered to his own undoing. Now the young Chuck was watching him limp away. Suddenly the young Chuck started after Flip, and because the latter had quite a start the Chuck ran. Johnny Chuck, watching from his doorstep, was puzzled. "Now, what is that fellow up to?" he muttered. "Isn't he satisfied with having driven that Dog off? He ought to be, but it looks as if he is running after another fight."

But the young Chuck wasn't. He was willing and ready to fight if he had to, but he wasn't looking for a fight. Far from it. He was simply trying to make use of his enemy. He was trying to make use of Flip.

You see, when Flip finally quit the young Chuck began to realize that although he had driven off that Dog his own situation wasn't the best. First, Reddy Fox and then Flip had

Mountain Maple (Acer Spicatum).

BY LILLIAN COX ATHEY.

WE ALWAYS think of the maples as lofty-minded folk and few know the three miniature members stems of bright red, they are to be found in the thick woods and forests where mixed hardwoods grow. Look for them this Summer as they walk through the woods and you will be delighted to make their acquaintance.

Usually they are close neighbors to the ground hemlocks and the viburnums. They dwell in the cool shadows and here you may linger and count the many dwellers of this delightful spot.

The mountain maple rarely reaches a height of 30 feet. In fact, it is a shrub and its trunk is about 8 inches in diameter. Its trunk does not have a single knot or blemish. It is another identification point. Besides, its leaves have taper-pointed lobes and they are saw-toothed along the margins. Swinging from long, strong stems of bright red, they are in the Summer, they bring a bright note into the dark woods.

The flowers are small. They are a greenish yellow and have long, narrow petals. You will find them clustered in the small trees in specially selected niches would take too long to wait and there are enough little mountain maples to supply the need.
