

Palestine Life

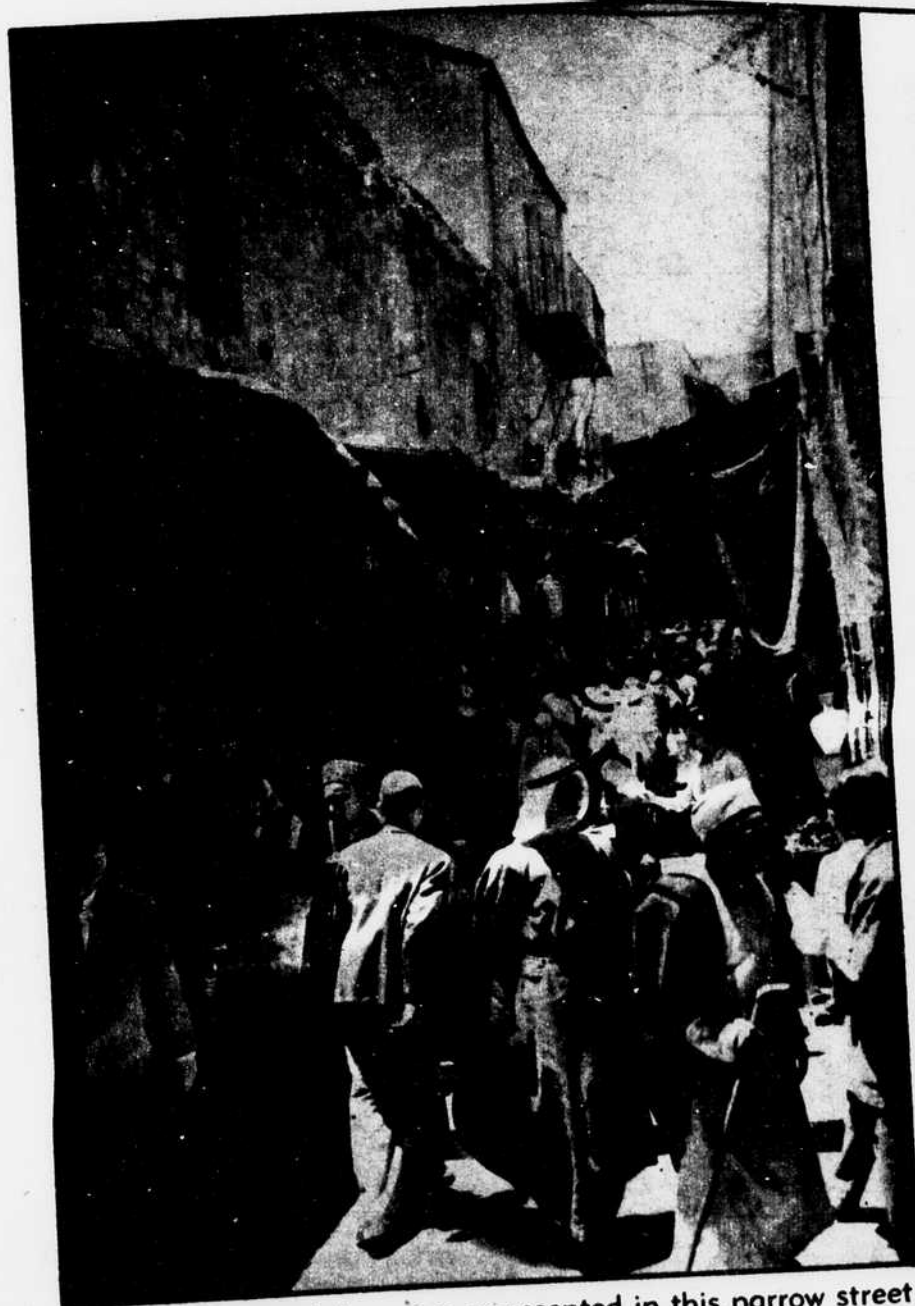

An Arab woman, walking by a modern car and jeep, uses an ancient method of carrying a basket.

While nations wrestle with Palestine's problems, residents of the country go about their daily affairs. Old and new customs mingle as Arabs, Jews and Britishers each try to make a living. Above, a vendor in the Arab section of Jerusalem sells lemonade from the lamp-shaped contraption on his back, and works hard for the money he earns.

Many types of dress are represented in this narrow street crowded with shops in the old part of Jerusalem.

Modern apartment buildings and stores in Tel Aviv are a decided contrast to the old sections of Palestine's towns. Wide World Photos.
