Spirit of Auld Lang Syne Rules Oldest Inhabitants' Anniversary

By George Kennedy
The Auld Lang Syne spirit ruled last night, as members of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants dined in the banquet room of the old Italian Embassy at 2600 Sixteenth street N.W. on the occasion of the organization's 83rd birthday. John Clagett Proctor, president, recalled that when he was married 61 years ago (Mrs. Proctor was sitting at one of the tables) and moved into a little house on Meridian Hill with no plumbing, gas or electricity, that a cornfield covered the site of the mansion in which they were dining. The house was built for Mrs. Marshall Field and later became an Embassy.

Years ago the Federal Government used to pay half the expenses of running the District. In recent years the Federal share dwindled to 10 per cent and last year was increased to a little above 12 per cent.) A barber shop quartet, under the direction of Jean M. Boardman, sang. Brooke Johns played the banjo. Former Police Inspector Richard H. Mansfield was about to go on with his talk on "Those Were the Happy Days" when some one told him he had two tickets on his car parked in the driveway. This disconcerted him so that he drove off without drawing a picture. Mr. Proctor, carried away by the spirit of the evening, read two original poems. Mrs. Marie C. Deal sang, accompanied by Mrs. Emily T. Thompson at the piano. The ceremony of drawing a white carnation from a vase for each member who had died since the preceding banquet was repeated. They were James H. Baden, Henry F. Blair, Harry C. Brooks, Edward G. Fowler, John A. Gallagher, John
