

Newspapermen importuned Detective Browne to give them further details of the arrests, but he declined. When asked if it were true that a person prominently connected with the McNamara defense was under surveillance, Browne said: "Wait and see."

The arrests caused an outburst of indignation from Attorney Darrow, who said he considered them part of a plan to influence public sentiment at the outset of the McNamara trial. Darrow pointed out that Lockwood had not been served with a subpoena to appear as a spokesman.

JURY ATTENDS FUNERAL OF JUROR BROTHER

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 28.—

While the members of the jury on the McNamara murder trial attended the funeral of Charles Sexton, brother of permanent juror J. B. Sexton, Judge Bordwell today qualified for examination the eleventh venire in the case. As a result of the Sexton funeral, the morning session was limited to the qualification of the venire.

Intense interest is felt in the court's rulings this afternoon on Edward Haskell, formerly of Albany, N. Y., who has been challenged by the state for actual bias. Haskell was for many years a practical miner working throughout Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico, and is now a clerk in the Los Angeles assessor's office.

He declared he "knew all about dynamite, realized fully that dynamite never caused the Times fire, and that it was an utter impossibility that it could."

He said he looked over the Times ruins, saw the real wreckage, which must have been caused by a fire, but which, he also insisted, could have been caused by a gas explosion.

He defended labor unions, saying he believed working men ought to have the same right to organize as merchants, bankers and other combinations of capitalists.

However, he insisted that he had absolutely no opinion whether dynamite was ever used at the Times and said he could try McNamara on the evidence produced in court.

The state demanded that he be excused because he said when he read in the Times of the building being "destroyed by unionist bombs," he immediately took the opposite view, "because he had found when the Times said one thing, that the real fact was directly opposite."

Should Bordwell refuse his statement that he can act fairly and impartially, and sustain the state's challenge, Attorney Darrow asserts he will enter into the record an objection in which he will say: "The court made one kind of law for the state and another for the defense."

There were still three vacancies in the box when court reconvened at 2 p. m. Of the fifty members of the eleventh venire examined by the court at the morning ses-
