THRILLING CAREER OF A NEW YORK MASTER CRIMINAL ENDS IN A BLAZE OF GUN PLAY

New York, Nov. 19.—The career of one of New York's master criminals was brought to an end here last night—and three bodies lie in the morgue today, and two men are dying in the hospital.

The man was Joseph Vogel, alias Therirdo Razyesky, 48 years old, who made hundreds of thousands of dollars by training women to steal for him.

Backed into a corner in the bedroom of a Raines Law hotel in the Bronx by the officers of the law, Vogel fought to the end and killed his wife and himself rather than be taken.

The bloody battle in the musty Bronx hotel was the sequel to a long series of big jewel robberies that baffled the New York police.

House after house was ransacked from end to end by domestic servants and in each case the servant disappeared as completely as if she had vanished into thin air.

The police became convinced that some master mind was directing the work of wholesale robbery. The entire Central Office force was put to work running down the cases.

And still the robberies continued, and still the servants disappeared, and still the police were without a clue.

Then accident came to the rescue of the police. Three weeks ago a patrolman on West 92d st. saw the cloaked figure of a woman carrying a bag hurrying down the street.

The patrolman stopped her and asked where she was going in such a hurry at 2 o'clock in the morning.

The woman fainted. The patrolman opened her bag. It was crammed with valuable jewelry and silverware.

When the girl recovered, in a cell, she was immediately given the third degree to make her tell where she got the jewelry.

She gave her name as Sophie Beckendorf, 18 years old, and readily admitted that she had stolen the jewelry from the home of Dr. Augustus Rosenbloom, 214 West 92d st., where she had been employed as a domestic.

But when she was asked if she had any accomplice a look of hunted terror always came into her eyes and she screamed that
