

graphs and ardent letters. They were married in 1913 in Mission City, B. C.

But the life to which she had been accustomed, the gay life of the Paris and London studios, and the rustic ways of Hole, who raises chickens for market, did not jibe well.

The man told about it here in court with swiftly flying fingers—the story of their silent courtship and the desertion of pretty Elsie after a fortnight of bliss.

"I still love her," spelled the fingers, "and I wish she would come back."

Since leaving her husband, the girl has been supporting herself by posing before the Seattle art clubs.

OUTBURSTS OF EVERETT TRUE

