MARGARET WILSON DECLARES FOR MORE RECREATION FOR KIDS

*Crowd Storm Auditorium To Hear President's Daughter
—She Says We Should Give Kids the Good Times
The Grown-Ups Have Had In the Past—
Wants Social Centers for Parents.*

Our duty to provide recreation for the boys and girls was emphasized by Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the president, in an address before the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women, while outside the Auditorium thousands of men and women rioted, shrieking and pushing and threatening and sometimes breaking their ranks to let through some woman carried away fainting.

Inside the Auditorium not more than fifty seats remained vacant and these were vacant due to the fact that the police, unable to control the surging, disappointed crowd on the streets had closed the doors and refused admission to delegates, speakers, reporters and the curious alike.

The theme of Miss Wilson's address was the necessity of getting back to the "town-hall" discussions of our grandparents, and she advocated that the schools should be thrown open for the purpose of
