MORALS COMMISSION MEMBERS GET A SLAP IN THE FACE

Advocates of the proposed Morals Commission were called "busybodles, notoriety seekers or other professional reformers," in a letter signed by the United Societies for Local Self-Government, which was sent to the aldermen yesterday.

"If these vice commissioners want to study," part of the letter read, "let them do so, but at their own expense. There should not be created a government within a government."

The prohibiting of public dances in buildings in which there are saloons and proposition of granting not more than six special bar permits to organizations was also protested against.
