INSIDE STORY OF FALL OF MORALS SQUAD CHIEF IS WHISPERED

Dannenberg Got "In Bad", Through Politics, Is Rumor —Had Threatened Raids on Call Flats in Respectable Districts—Ambitions of Funkhouser a Factor

Here's the "inside story" that brewed in the city hall today concerning the filing of charges against Inspector of Morals W. C. Dannenberg by Major Funkhouser.

When Dannenberg passed the civil service test for head of the morals division, Funkhouser was elated. The major was very anxious to hang up a record as a vice chaser. And here was a young man, very zealous in his pursuit of unfortunate women of the underworld, who would work hard to set a record.

Chicago is well acquainted with the deeds, or the misdeeds, of the morals squad in the past two years. Girl after girl was dragged into the morals court. Stool pigeons were hired by Funkhouser at a heavy expense to the city. The morals squad were the talk of the town.

And for every thing that Dannenberg, who headed the squad, pulled off, Funkhouser came in for the newspaper credit. The Tribune, Herald and News particularly took up the squad and made it a political asset. And always the face of Funkhouser beamed from the picture.
