

turn a perfectly good man into a demon.

If you don't believe me now, the time may come when you will look back and remember with tears that I begged you to break your engagement while you could.

Do you know anything about the horror it is to find yourself the wife of a drunkard? Did you ever see a drunkard on the street and imagine him going home to some woman who was his wife and imagine that wife to be YOU?

Well, remember this:

No woman, with an ounce of gray matter, ever marries a man whom she knows to be a drunkard. It always begins with "a little."

But that "little," which will be kept "little," while you are engaged, and he knows he will surely lose you if he lets his appetite for it get away from him, will, in all probability, increase when he has you safe in the bondage of the wedding ring, and you will have deliberately jeopardized the health of your children as well as your own peace of mind, because you did not listen to the voice in your own soul which bade you beware of the man who drinks.

When I urge girls to break their engagements—when they can—I am the best friend their lovers can have.

For, if the girls can't break the engagement, we have put the acid test on their love for you, and you ought to thank me.

If, on the other hand, they CAN break the engagement and do it, then they were not the wife—wives—wife, I mean! for you, and I have saved you a lot of lawyer's fees and alimony. So you ought to thank me for THAT!

And every one in jitneys fit
That's got a fit to pay.

Mrs.
Florence
Milner

"The schoolboys' best friend and wisest counselor," is what folks in Detroit, Mich., call Mrs. Florence Milner, associate principal of the Detroit University school, an exclusive boys' school.

Mrs. Milner has supervision of the boys from their kindergarten days to the time they enter college. She is said to be the only woman in the United States to hold so important a position in a boys' school.

Mrs. Milner has written several books of special interest to teachers and mothers.
