Chicago Gun club experts defeated the touring major league baseball gun team, 453 to 406, mainly due to the ineffective work of Christy Mathewson and Harry Davis. Chief Bender broke 91 targets and Otis Crandall 92.

A year or so ago Ted Lewis was loafing around Australia trying to decide whether to join the British army and fight in the trenches or jump to the United States and do his fighting in the ring.

He was an English featherweight champ, but his title was not doing him much good. He had whipped all the boys in England, then gone to Australia, where he cleaned out the featherweights and walloped so many lightweights few boxers wanted to meet him. When he did get a bout it didn't pay much money. He decided on the trip to America.

Now a lot of boxers are sorry he didn't go to war. There's Jack Britton, for instance. Jack was some punkins, but Lewis beat him twice. Joe Mandot thought he was on the road to a fight with Welsh for the championship, but Lewis blocked his path.

Charley White was having things about his own way among the 135-pounders, but Lewis showed him some one else carried a hefty kick in his left mitt. Kid Graves was doing real well as a welterweight and Lewis upset him.

Lewis—his right name, by the way, is Gershon Mendeloff — is a rangy chap with a terrific punch. He has scored a knockdown or two in all his fights here.

He's about the most elastic chap the ring ever produced. He doesn't bar any one at 133 pounds, yet he weighed 150 for Graves and expects to weigh in at 158 if he gets a match with Mike Gibbons. Just how this fighter is able to put on and take off weight like that nobody seems to know, but he does.

And in doing so this Englishman who was not making training expenses a year ago is piling up a fortune.

If Jess Willard fights in New Orleans, as he has signed to do, it will be the first time a heavyweight title fight has been held there in 25 years. In 1892 Jim Corbett knocked out John L. Sullivan at New Orleans and won the heavyweight title. Sullivan, Corbett, Fitzsimmons, Jeffries, Johnson and Willard have held the title in the past 25 years.

Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, miffed at the criticism he is picking out the soft ones in his division, has raised the weight limit from 122 pounds to 133, and announced that he will meet any man in the world at that weight.

Since he became champion Kilbane has made nearly all his opponents make 122 pounds. He says there are no 122-pounders worthy of a championship match and he is ready to take on lightweights.

"Spot" Geyer, captain and fullback of the Oklahoma university eleven, can throw a football farther than some players can kick it. He has made several forward passes of 50 yards and in one game made a pass of 55 yards — more than half the length of the field. That pass is claimed as a record for the gridiron sport.

Oklahoma probably makes better
