SWIFT & CO. CHEATED IN REVENGE HUNT

Supreme Court Names Henry Veeder and High Beef
Men as Peculiarly "Active" in Ehle
Prosecution.

HERE'S A WIFE AND KIDDIES WITH A REAL EASTER

Louis C. Ehle's Easter tomorrow will be different from his Christmas. He went Christmas eve to his home at 1360 E. 49th st., with the holiday news for his wife and children that he had been sentenced to seven years in convict clothes behind iron bars. Last night he brought the wife and kiddies the news that he's a free man and the high seven judges of the Illinois supreme court say his prosecution looks like dirty personal revenge and maybe dirty corporation politics.

The seven supreme court judges of the state of Illinois handed down a decision yesterday in a criminal case. And the seven judges go out of their way and take special pains to point out peculiar inside workings of the so-called machinery of justice in Chicago.

In reversing the lower court action in the case of Louis C. Ehle, a former attorney for Swift & Co., the supreme court intimates that it doesn't like the way Swift & Co. are monkeying with the machinery of justice in Chicago.
