

HOW MOVIE STARS ARE RE-FRILLED

Hollywood, Cal., April 13. — The "Make-While-You-Wait" room at the Keystone film-fun foundry is one of the most important and newest establishments in the movie world. The unknown women who run it are heroines every hour of the day. The money these women save runs into thousands of dollars in a year.

Myrtle Lind Having Her Costume Altered in "Make-While-You-Wait" Room

The "Make-While-You-Wait" room is an adjunct of the wardrobe department. In it alterations are made. For instance, a star's costume lacks something. She goes to the alteration room and there the unknown heroines stitch busily with needles to make it right.

In the meantime the camera grinds on, shooting some scene in which the star is not scheduled to appear. It prevents the company from standing idle while a new costume is secured for the star. It also saves the price of the costume.

"Often," says Producer Mack Sen-