A SPANISH POEM.

O! let the soul its slumber break, Arouse its senses and awake.
To see how soon
Life, with its glory, glides away,
And the stern footstep of decay Come stealing on.
And while we eye the rolling tide, Down which our flowing minutes glide Away so fast,
Let us the present hour employ,
And dream each future dream of joy Already past.
Let no vain hope deceive the mind—No happier let us hope to find To-morrow than to-day;
Our golden dreams of yore were bright;
Like them, the present shall delight—Like them, decay.
Our lives, like hasting streams, must be,
That into one engulfing sea Are doomed to fall—
The sea of death, whose waves roll on O'er king and kingdom, crown and throne.
And swallow all.
Alike the river's lordly tide, Alike the humble rivulet's glide
To that vast wave,
Death levels property and pride,
And rich and poor sleep side by side Within the grave.
Our birth is but the starting place;
Life is the running of the race,
And death the goal.
There all those glittering toys are brought,
The path alone of all unsought, Is found of all.
Say, then, how poor and little worth Are all those glittering toys of earth That lure us here?
Dreams of a sleep that death must break.
Alas! before it bids us wake, Ye disappear!

DETHRONEMENT OF ABDUL AZIZ.

On hearing of it, he became like a man, declared he was still Padisha, and would be obeyed, at the same time threatening the most terrible vengeance against those who should act against him. The Valida Sultana, who has always been the Sultan's civil adviser, was sent for and entered the room. To her inquiry, Redif stated calmly that Murad V had been proclaimed, and that the nation had been pleased to depose her son. Then the Sultan made a motion to his Chamberlain, but Redif at once interfered. "All resistance is useless. Your Majesty may assure yourself of that by looking out of the window." On going there he saw troops on every side with fixed bayonets.
He was told the palace was surrounded, every avenue guarded, and escape impossible. Thereupon he burst into tears. He would concede everything, sign anything, do whatever was wanted.
Redif told him that the concessions were too late. His successor had been appointed, and was accepted by the people. Then he became anxious only to save his life. Were they going to kill him? The answer came, "Not unless you resist." There was a cask at the water-gate on the Bosphorus.
If he would enter it quietly he should be taken to Top Capon, better known to Europeans as the small building which stands near the site of the old palace on Seraglio Point. Seeing that his position was hopeless unless he consented to the demand, he dressed himself, and went with Redif on to the terrace. His children were sent for and placed in the same boat with him.
His mother, the Valida Sultana, with her ladies in waiting, were placed in another. The men-of-war's boats clustered thickly round the cask reserved for the prisoner. As he entered Redif said to Arif Pasha, who had been deputed by Hussein Avni to take him to Seraglio Point, "I give in charge to you the body of Abdul Aziz. You are to take him to Top Capon, and deliver him to an officer indicated. If the slightest resistance is made, kill him and the whole of the party." The calks then started for their destination.

Returning to the palace, Redif took measures to secure the harem. The women were not disturbed more than was absolutely necessary, but guards were placed on every hand, with orders to allow no one to leave the palace.
Within the harem was the private treasure house. This, of course, was strictly guarded as soon as the women could be removed from that part of the building. Sentries were placed in various parts of the palace, and then a large portion of the troops were sent away from the Dolma Bagche to Stam-boul. Amid pouring rain, which after a drought of nearly four months, seemed on Tuesday morning to be making up for lost time, and in a cold northwesterly gale, the ex-Sultan was conveyed from his palace to Seraglio Point, a distance of about a mile and a half. He was at once lodged in a small apartment which had been prepared for him.—Correspondence of the N. Y. World.

TENDER MEMORIES.

From the Boston Transcript.
I saw my wife pull out the bottom drawer of the old bureau this evening, and I went softly out and wandered up and down until I knew she had shut it up and gone to her sewing. We had some things laid away in that drawer which the gold of kings could not buy, and yet they are relics which grieve us until both our hearts are sore. I haven't dared to look at them for a year, but I remember each article.
There were two worn shoes, a little chip hat with part of the brim gone, some stockings, bits of broken crockery, a whip and several toys. Wife, poor thing, goes to that drawer every day of her life and prays over it and lets her tears drop upon the precious articles, but I dare not go. Sometimes we speak of little Jack, but not often. It has been a long time, but somehow we can't get overgrieving. Sometimes as we sit alone on an evening, I writing and she sewing, a child in the street will call out to our little boy used to, and we will both start up with beating hearts and a wild hope, only to find the darkness more of a burden than ever. It is still and quiet now. I look up to the window where his blue eyes used to sparkle at my coming, but he is not there. I listen for his pattering feet, his merry shout, and ringing laughter; but there is no sound. There is no one to search my pockets and tease me for presents, and I never find the chairs turned over, the broom down, or ropes tied to the door knobs. I want some one to tease me for my knife, or to ride on my shoulders; to follow me to the gate when I go, and be there when I come; to call "good-night" from the little bed now empty. And, wife, she misses him still more. Here are no little feet to wash, no prayers to say, no voice teasing for lumps of sugar, or sobbing with the pain of a hurt toe; and she would give her own life, almost, to awake at midnight and look across to the crib and see our boy there as he used to be. So we preserve our relics, and when we are dead we hope that strangers will handle them tenderly, even if they shed no tears over them.

The health of Dr. J. C. Ayer is pronounced beyond the reach of his own or any other medicine.

AVERILL PAINT

The best
MIXED PAINTS IN USE

in all Colors & Shades

This Paint is prepared in liquid form, ready for use—requiring no further addition of oil or spirits. It is of Pure White, and of any shade or color.
It is composed of the best materials known to the trade—Pure Linseed Oil, Strictly Pure White Lead, Pure Zinc, and the purest coloring matter procurable for tinting, which by our peculiar process of manufacture, are so thoroughly united that they cannot separate. Hence, it will never crack, crack or peel off; does not run from seams or nail holes; and for brilliancy of color, and beauty of finish, it is without a rival.
Put up in 4, 8, 12, 24 and 3 gallon Packages, and in barrels.
